Yes to the Extra part. I have been trying to get to 20 wpm all my life and I continue now. It has never made anymore sense to me than a requirement to be able to run a five minute mile. 16 wpm seems to be the fastest code I can differentiate with my ear/brain connection.

If the code guys need a special chunk of the band to operate high speed code they can petition for it. My hat is off to those who have both the code skills and the technical skills to be superior to me on any subject.

However, I am embarrassed as a long time Ham by those who would deny the hobby to anyone without Code skills.

I believe the ARRL offers Award Certificates to those who can achieve the higher speeds.

Thanks for the opportunity to speak out. Another characteristic that earns no respect from me is the matter of remaining anonymous on the Internet. I expect that your CB handle is something like "Bad boy" or "Rain Brain". If you were not a troll by choice you might be able to make a positive contribution some where.

Marky's house used to be a happy home. This is the tard's mom favorite site:

http://comebangmymom.com/

But his Mommy got pissed,I mean REALLY pissed. She caught marky sucking his bed ridden pappy's cock and fucking his old crusty ass. She tried to join in the family fun, but they didn't want her. They only wanted cock. So, mommy dearest left home and ran into the arms of her negro pimp. The boy couldn't turn a profit on her nasty old pussy, but she does bring in a few bucks blowing crack heads. The negro had her remaining rotten teeth pulled.

If you need to complain to them, let me know via direct E-mail and I'll be happy to get you in touch with IT security. I seriously doubt he will care though.

And yes... This is something folks on this forum have threatened me with before and it always comes to nothing.

Not my style, never has been. You are assuming, something similar to the other poster, that I 'might' or might not do. Speaking for myself, it is not my style to mess with people's employers, ever. HOWEVER, the point to be taken is that there ARE many in this forum who take great joy in doing exactly that. I am glad your employer has such a view, because very few employers now see it that way and believe work time and work equipment are for just that, work and not for playing on Usenet. Care to mention exactly who has threatened you in this forum?

Slow Code, I think it is time you put up or shut up. If the skills among you dinos were so great, then you had to finish at the top of your category. So tell us now, what group were you part of, what section, and what category did you compete in?

Then, when the results are published, we will compare your standings with those other groups who had the modern, technically trained operators.

We'll see if the dinos are extinct or if modern humans have triumphed.

Why bring it up if it's not your "style"?

This was brought up a few times before, by folks who thought I was trying to hide who I was. I don't care to go though the archives to find out which alter ego of who it was because it doesn't matter.

Because I had a pt job delivering pizzas a couple years ago while I was working my way through college studying info tech.
I did so good in the pizza business I was promoted to district manager and got a company car. Someone from this forum called my boss, used a bunch of filthy words and tried to get me fired. Only thing, he was from out of state and would not leave a name or phone number, so my boss ignored the complaints.

"Nice" forgery. But that's OK. When the opposition proves that it cannot make its argument via anything other than dirty tricks, then it clearly undermines its own position.

Your forgery wasn't perfect, though. Based on the NNTP-Posting-Host and X-Complaints-To header, a forgery report has been passed on to your ISP (abuse@aioe.org). They probably won't prorate your account for the rest of the month when they cancel you.

Back then, a ham radio club would upgrade the technical knowledge of members via more experienced hams coaching (Elmering) the newer inexperienced members.

Today, ham radio clubs always end up "dumbing-down" to the level of their dumbest members, with the end result of the technically more competent members leaving the club out of boredom and no challenge.

A sad testimony to the state of ham radio today.

Aioe.org is an Italian nntp server which is free, so there won't be any cancelling going on. Unfortunately, a significant number of forged posts is originated at that server on a daily basis, although it doesn't even begin to come close to the trash which Google permits to enter Usenet. Good luck on tracking the idiot down, but I wouldn't hold my breath waiting for anything meaningful to happen.

What? I ask a friendly question as to who would re-new their license if Code speeds were increased to what they should be and I get called a troll. Well eat shit and die. I got a real Extra class license. You nickle hams are really unfriendly assholes sometimes.

Even if only three contacts are made, the score isn't what's important.
What is important is showing and training new hams in how to communicate and operate effectively during emergencies and not be Appliance operators.
Hams like you that worry about final score are more likely to cheat because you choose to ignore or fail to see the things that are important.

I know you're right, but it's not really the fault of the clubs, it's that the hams getting licensed are dumbed down so clubs don't have good operators to sign up.

You could not be more correct OM !!

I went out to a "Field Day" last week to see a local Club effort.

The BASTARDS had EXTENSION CORDS running out of the windows of the building they were set up outside of running the SB-220 amplifier so they could make more contest points. (!!)

(I managed to snap a few covert photos with my camera
phone and that of their club banner for easy ID by the ARRL.
It will be VERY FUNNY to see them when their logs are DISQUALIFIED for running illegal AC power when they claimed they were running class 6A)

Ham radio today is nothing but one big EGO TRIP for a bunch of dirty old men white blowhards and racist pricks.
I hope their ham radio goes right into the TOILET in the comming years.

I call B.S.! If you old, outdated methods of communication are so superior, then you should have locked up the contest.

So, this means one of two things. 1.) you're not telling the truth, or, 2.) the old methods you claim are superior are really not and the new "appliance operators" at other clubs using modern methods kicked your collective butts.

I suspect that 1. is the truth and you did not participate in FD and didn't teach any news hams anything. In fact, if you did participate in FD, the "appliance operators" probably ran rings around you and embarrassed you so bad, you had to create this story to save face.

Nice try, no one is buying the BS.

Well, Slow Code, I'll give you a straight (and I hope friendly) answer to your question. I'll then give you a straight (and I hope not-unfriendly) explanation as to why I believe people are calling you a troll.

The first answer: well, I think I'd certainly try to renew my license. My CW is distinctly rusty - I use it only rarely, and I'm not sure I've ever managed to copy 13 WPM (let alone 20) well enough to pass the one-minute-error-free barrier, or be able to answer the necessary number of questions. So, it'd take a bunch of listening and practice to reach that level.

I'm not sure I have enough time free to do it. I've got a busy life, work full-time plus a bit, and much of my ham-radio playing time goes into other areas of the service (I'm an ARES/RACES AEC for my city, a mutual-aid comms responder for the county, and I've put in a huge boatload of hours over the past couple of years helping redesign and rebuild and debug the local hospital's repeater system). Getting really serious about doing high-speed CW would consume a lot of time, which would necessarily subtract from my ability to (e.g.) spend many hours of circuit analysis and modelling and experimentation to figure out why the fancy commercial repeaters we bought had such lousy-sounding audio (turns out the designer had mis-used the discriminator IC, forcing it to "clip" the signal internally, and had messed up the design of the de-emphasis network.)

And, I have no assurance that I'd ever reach that level. As several other people have commented, it's perfectly possible for people to work, hard and honestly, at copying CW for years, and never be able to reach the 13 WPM level. I strongly suspect that to some extent, CW-copying is tied to certain sorts of neurological organization in the ear/brain system - some people may be born with more potential ability to handle high-speed CW than others. Effort or no, some people seem unable to learn to copy CW at all, others can do so but never become very good at it, and many people report hitting the "13 WPM wall" and never being able to copy reliably at rates much faster than that.

Now, in your previous epistles on the subject, you and your nym-clone were advocating not only requiring testing for 13 WPM (General) and 20 WPM (Extra), but also making the no-code license a one-year nonrenewable. If that proposal were accepted, there's a strong possibility that I'd end up being kicked off of the air the next time my license came due... either because I was unable to push up to 13 WPM no matter how hard I tried, or because I'd devoted my time to other aspects of ham radio and hadn't taken time to study-up.

So - that's my answer. I might end up being able to renew my license (although probably not at the 20 WPM level), I might fail the CW test, or I might just decide that the "old boy's club" had made it clear that they didn't want anybody other than rabid CW operators on the air, and decide to go do something else productive with my time.

Now - that being said - let's address why you were being called a troll. I think it's because it's quite clear to people reading these threads that you have a serious agenda, sir. You've made several attempts (apparently under several posting IDs - some refer to these as "sock puppets") to drum up support for your CW Uber Alles rules change proposal. You've scoffed at, or simply ignored, the many people who have pointed out that your proposed changes are 180 degrees out of phase with the international trends (i.e. the WARC rules), and with the FCC's publicly-stated feelings on the matter, and that your proposals are essentially equivalent to ones which have already been ruled out by the Powers That Be.

In short, the "what if?" question you asked is entirely hypothetical. There's just no chance at all that the FCC would enact the sort of CW-centric licensing rules you have proposed. Ain't gonna happen. Your asking questions about "well, if it _did_, what would you do" is probably part of why you're being called a troll.

Numerous people have responded to you, expressing their opinions that your rules would decimate the ranks of amateur radio by forcing off of the air a large percentage of today's licensed operators. Your "friendly question" seems to be intended to try to address that question, but you phrased your inquiry in somewhat-loaded terms, and in a way which almost guarantees that you won't receive an accurate and unbiased set of answers which actually represent the feelings and opinions of this newsgroup's readers.

To sum it up, your way of presenting your agenda probably leads people to believe that you aren't serious about debating or discussing the issue... and that's probably another part of why you're being called a troll.

I agree with you that the Amateur Radio Service (and hobby) benefits greatly from being hams to like to study, learn, advance their skills, and use what they know. That's one of the specific purposes of amateur radio here in the U.S., and I think it's great.

I disagree with you that the ability to learn to copy CW at 13 - 20 WPM is, or should be, the "litmus test" which decides whether a person is Worthy of being a ham.

Your fixation on CW is, I think, actively interfering with your ability to support ham radio by promoting all aspects of technical and operational learning. I believe that your attitude hurts ham radio more than it helps.

That's my $0.05 worth, adjusted for inflation. Take it for what it's worth for you.

[and, I'm sorry to say, based on your past postings I don't really expect you to address the meat of what I've said. I expect that you'll toss off a one- or two-liner, dismiss what I've written, and keep on as you have been. I'd be pleasantly surprised to be wrong about this!]

"Nice" forgery. But that's OK. When the opposition proves that it cannot make its argument via anything other than dirty tricks, then it clearly undermines its own position.

Your forgery wasn't perfect, though. Based on the NNTP-Posting-Host and X-Complaints-To header, a forgery report has been passed on to your ISP (abuse@aioe.org). They probably won't prorate your account for the rest of the month when they cancel you.

Who nominated YOU as newsgroup moderator, Paul? Oh, and please DO stop sending "welcome" messages to the new users of the ra newsgroups, won't you?
Why, if we didn't already know that you are a self-appointed stuffed shirt, you could almost have a newcomer believe that you actually have something to do with the groups.
If I want to hear from a stuffed shirt, Paul, I'll write a letter to Ted Kennedy.

I have been instrumental in establishing and publishing FAQs about the rra newsgroups since 1923, when Hiram Percy Maxim appointed me to the position of Usenet News Coordinator (Mr. Maxim was so farsighted that he acutally foresaw the creation of Usenet.) I have forgotten more about amateur radio than you have yet to learn, so I suggest that you STFU, as they say at League Headquarters.

These are the numbers of current, unexpired amateur radio licenses held by individuals on the stated dates, and the percentage of the total number of active licenses that class contains:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice - 49,329 (7.3%)
Technician - 205,394 (30.4%)
Technician Plus - 128,860 (19.1%)
General - 112,677 (16.7%)
Advanced - 99,782 (14.8%)
Extra - 78,750 (11.7%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254 (49.5%)

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 291,209 (43.2%)

Total all classes - 674,792

As of July 1, 2006:

Novice - 24,877 (3.8%) [decrease of 24,452]
Technician - 282,448 (42.9%) [increase of 77,054]
Technician Plus - 37,801 (5.7%) [decrease of 91,059]
General - 132,757 (20.2%) [increase of 20,080]
Advanced - 71,749 (10.9%) [decrease of 28,033]
Extra - 108,185 (16.4%) [increase of 29,435]

Total Tech/TechPlus - 320,049 (48.7%) [decrease of 14,205]

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 312,691 (47.5%) [increase of 21,482]

Total all classes - 657,817 (decrease of 16,975)

Note that these totals do not include licenses that have expired but are in the grace period.

They also do not include club, military, RACES or other station-only licenses.

Note also that effective April 15, 2000, new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced licenses are no longer issued.

Since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician. It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

wel I support it's contiued existance

I also know the future is NO Code and the sooer we get on with it the than allow it to do waht everything living does grow and change over time

thier kind of Ham is the toilet, ut in unloking the bands from their frat house games it may be possible in time to revive the ARS

I tried to call his number but I get a recording that says he is not receiving incoming calls. He must have sold out all the used boys underwear. I'm glad to finaly know who this aoie.org fuck is, now I can do some Goggle searching on his stupid ass. What's great is that every couple of years we pass through Alabama on our way to Florida. Think my next trip I might stop by and say hi, maybe get a few pics if he isn't camera shy.

I always liked the idea of the 13/20 wpm requirements because it did push us to greater heights of achievment.

Some want to be Doctors and some want to be rice pickers. That should not be taken away from us. In one country I recall, it was mandated that ALL would be rice pickers at the barrel of an AK47 by sadistic nut jobs with a grudge against achievers. Of course the result was 2 classes: The bullies and the rice pickers. Perhaps the bullies had little regard for anything but rice and violence.

Mastering the code and advancing in speed requires determination and control of ones emotional state to allow the information to flow. This is very difficult for beligerant people to do, so they complain, bitch and cajole rather than just doing what needed to be done. As for the technical requirements. Not enough. Even beligerant people can learn to field strip a rifle.

One of the greatest mistakes people make is to try to analyze and manage things beyond their control. The ear/brain thing people are talking about is irrelevant.

The process is there if you let it happen. Designed by The Creator. Forget about concentration, forget about analysis. How many of you really think about all the connecting tissues that have to be pulled in order to just walk? Just start writing down on paper what you are hearing. Don't think about it at all. Above all find the peace to release the anxiety of missing a word or character and just continue. This is where the self-control comes in. Soon you will find the errors less and less and you will be able to fill in the missing characters and words by memory.

Find the peace of Jesus and all is yours.

Yeah. That was after usenetzone.com banned kb9rqz because of all the posts he made through the service. If kb9rqz still had usenetzone access, it would be hard to tell if that is a forgery or not.

But since usenetzone doesn't want Mark posting through its servers, we can all be more or less sure that it's a forgery. Right, Mark?

Right?

Indeed I post daily though usenet zone just not to the radio NG's only used it in radio NG's when I was beating down Robeson with sheer volume

althought even then I never used the hotmail accounts for that purpose

No, you've not...Other than to express your desire to copulate with me with that "...in your ###..." comment. Of course it's a well known fact that you'e a sexual deviant, so that was not unexpected.

> you will treated wit coutesy when you start treating all other with Mark, you're incapable of anything resembling "courtesy". That was made abundantly clear on "day 1" when your very first post to me responded with "lier"...

The rest has been "you reap what you sew..."

Who's in a hurry?

Oooops...Never mind...Since you have to have over 15 different screen names to overcome posting limits with all of your "get help" posts, THAT is apparent.

In any case, I am hardly a "fast" typist. I am just better educated and better trained than you. Not that that was a hard thing to do....

> you replies get the attention they desrvse very little

Considering that 99.9% of YOUR posts are forgings of people who are probably less educated than you, I'd say that I help raise the bell curve of your posts. But it's an uphill battle.

No, you don't.

Not a single one.

You brag about all these "degrees" you have, but can't seem to name a single public or private educational facility from which you've graduated. Your suggestion that it's an attempt to prevent "stalking" is a blatant lie.

You have NO secondary education beyond high school, Mork.

No, you didn't, deviant.

You've not answered what a "feild" is.

You've not answered what it was that I allegedly "quit".

More sexual innuendo, Mork...I am sure you WOULD like to "knaw" (gnaw, you idiot...) on me, but that's not a happening thing, fatboy.

There's not such thing as a "Maj", Mork...Not in English, anyway.

Of course since you are incompetent in English, I guess it's foolhearty to expect you to use REAL words.

Indeed you will. You won't have any choice, because it is 99% certain that your account will be terminated. Just as soon as an ISP receives any letters of that type, it decides you aren't worth the liability it may incur, and you get dumped.

> but you still fail to adress the fact yo were caught in a lie

It was kind of nice that you fell for that and replied with your bogus morgan.com domain to prove you had access and that the poster was yourself. Now there's no way you can squirm out of any enforcement activities which may follow.

I'd say that you just demonstrated your own profound stupidity.

That is why I have always proposed that licenses shouldn't be automatically renewable. When a license expires or is just about to expire the ham must retake and pass all exam elements required for that license class before it can be renewed again.

99% of the hams on usenet hate my proposal. They think you shouldn't have to be proficient at anything to have a ham radio license. I think the reason all this came about was after ham radio was dumbed down by restructuring alot of CB'ers were able to get licensed and oppose anything that might required you work to be proficient and valuable asset to the service.

I know you're right.

Hams just want to be appliance operators these days and they don't want license exams that will interfere with them getting to those appliances even though it means being less worthy. I don't see anyone modernizing like everyone says is happening. They just get their licenses and grab a microphone. What percentage of hams have a computer connected to a radio? Probably less than 30%. Hams don't want to modernize. Guess we just have live with inferior operators on the bands from here on out. Then again, maybe hams shouldn't be required to be knowledgable or have skills. Requiring skill and knowledge is too old skool. Everything must be outcome based these days, even licensing. It ain't like we have to help out in emergencies or anything. Thanks Dave, I hadn't thought about it like that before.

They cheapened the license, now nobody decent wants to get one and the FCC is still thinking of dumbing it down even more. Pretty soon it will be just CB'ers, lids, and retards that get licensed because testing will get dumbed down to the point even they can get an extra, then the rest of us will have to listen to bands that sound like 11 meters.

Just exactly what are you trying to babble out now? Having more qualified hams will kill the service? An amateur radio license isn't worth enough that you should have to work for it? License candidates are lazy and won't work to get a license?

Please babble to us how requiring more proficient amateurs will kill ham radio.

Nonsense. That's an illogical conclusion on your part, and _not_

It would probably reduce the total number of hams. But those who just want to buy a radio, plug it in and yell at people can still buy a CB

Usenet itself doesn't matter any more and is slowly going the way of the dinosaurs. Look at these newsgroups as an example of why real radio discussion is carried on elswhere. People like Mark are like the squatters which still inhabit an otherwise abandoned city.

Want to keep up with amateur radio policy and activities? You need to go to a web site these days, perhaps http://www.qrz.com or http://www.arrl.org. Have something for sale or trade? The pages of http://www.qth.com may hold the answer for you. If not, you can always go to Ebay.

Is there a specialized topic that interests you? Again, if you want to discuss something while remaining unmolested by the Mark Morgans of the world, you probably will find what you want on the web. I find extremely useful broadband information at http://broadbandreports.com that simply can't be found on Usenet at all.

Usenet is basically a wasteland which is very close to death. Even AOL realized that was the case and shut down its own news servers a couple of years ago.

Mostly misfits remain on Usenet, and they'll remain here until some admin somewhere finally pulls the plug on the last nntp server. Until that time, attention seekers like Mark Morgan will continue to provoke anyone they can into paying attention to them.

And people like me will oblige by making fun of Mark. It is, after all, what he really wants.

Lardass eats the leftovers!

Bird droppings survive space launch Wed Jul 5, 5:29 PM ET

HOUSTON - NASA's rocket scientists have a new appreciation for the out-of-this-world power of bird droppings. The orbiting space shuttle Discovery sported some whitish splotches on its black right wing edge that NASA officials said appeared to be bird droppings.

Shuttle lead flight director Tony Ceccacci said he saw the same splotches on the identical part of the shuttle about three weeks ago when Discovery was on the launch pad and laughed when pictures beamed back from space Wednesday showed they were still there.

That means these bird droppings withstood regular Florida thunderstorms, a mighty Fourth of July launch during which 300,000 gallons of water is sprayed at the shuttle's main engines, and a burst upward through Earth's atmosphere. During that launch Discovery went from zero to 17,500 mph in just under 9 minutes.

And still the bird droppings remained in place. Mostly.

Some of the droppings may have shaken off during liftoff, Ceccacci guessed. He figures the rest will burn up during landing, when the shuttle's edges get as hot as 3,000 degrees Fahrenheit.

Rob Fergus, science coordinator for Audubon At Home, a division of the National Audubon Society, sometimes gets calls from people asking how to remove bird excrement from their cars.

"Usually they can hose it off," he said. "Apparently that doesn't work with the space shuttle. Maybe they need a bigger hose or Lloyd Davies."

Muwhahahahahahaha!!!!!!!!!

No, YOU are always refering to male anatomy, Mork...And WHO is
"Maj"...?!?!

Nope.

YOU have been extended EVERY courtesy and opportunity to "cool your jets", yet you prefer to continue your deceptions and deviant behaviour, along with your profanities and abuse of The King's English.

> >That

Nope.

It had everything to do with an emotional, uneducated retort from you.

Your question was "...who gave the FCC the power to regulate radio..." I accurately responded that The Communications Act of 1934 (As Ammended) did.

So...From the very "git-go", YOU have been the abuser.

Nope. It's a fact.

See, Morkie...That should have been a question, but you wrote it as a statement. More proof that your assertions about multiple college degrees is false.

Crappy writing like that would let you get out of 3rd grade unless your daddy bribed the teacher or mom rendered "favors" for the principal to let you out.

The "three degrees" assertion is YOURS, fatboy.

I call you a liar.

YOU prove me wrong...C'mon, fatboy! You can do it! Just give us the name of the institutions that granted you a degree and the year it was granted.

So far, I've done some searching in Illinois and come up with nothing. Michigan either. I found one "Mark C. Morgan" currently enrolled but he's only 21. I found another but he'd be over 65.

No...You can "make them up". Anything you name would be ficticious.

Unless you can prove otherwise.

Who's "Maj"...?!?!

And what's an "everytone"?

What libel?

So far YOU have insisted that you have three college degrees
despite being obviously incompetent in English, among other things.

YOU would prove me wrong by listing the names of the institutions and the dates you "graduated".

But I guess that's too much for you.

And by failing to answer this and making some assinine allegations of "stalking" to avoid it, YOU prove my assertions.

There's nothing "sexaul" about your non-answer.

Nope...You've never answered the question.

You can't repeat what you didn't state in the first place.

Morkie, it's only been the last couple of months that you've been insisting that I quit some "feild".

You refuse to define what a "feild" is.

"Everyone" does...?!?!

What's a "Maj", Morkie?

And define this NEW word you've created, "yothis"...

Why don't you quit lying to us and yourself and install a spellchecker so you can stop looking like the idiot we all KNOW you are, Mork?

"I Am Laughing At The Superior Intellect..."

you OTOH came in here insulting folks from day one so you ogt unwelcom mat in return

more of your lies

calling someone a child molestor is not coutesy

neither is attacking someone wife with lies nor are lies about sueing me coutesous

or your threats to kill me or show up ilegealy on my land

nor were your staments about my father indeed I can't think of a single coutesy you have extended to me in the entire time I have had the misfortune to be aquainted with you (i suspect tere may have been one or 2 over the years I simply can't recall any) alegedly (by your own words you do not care about my sexlife

so which of those staments is a lie?

I realy don't care about the wishes of the english crown (which is held

you must need mental help if you think I am going to help you stalk me

Hello all,
I need your help. I am suffering a very serious cash flow problem which has left me in a very bad situation where I am facing foreclosure and repossession of my car.
I am asking each of you who reads this message to make a donation to me of between $1 and $5 (or between 1 and 5 of your countries unit of currency) to assist me at this time. I am sure that none of you will miss such a small amount but if you all respond then I it will help me get back on track with my life which is certainly facing a serious crisis at the moment.
If you are in a position where you feel you can make a larger donation to help me out then please feel free to make whatever contribution you believe will assist me.
You can either send the money to me by mail (kb9rqz good at qrz.com) or deposit it in my Paypal account.
The email address you will need to make a payment into my Paypal account is kb9rqz_ars@hotmail.com
I thank you all in advance for your help. If you are sending me your donation by mail please email me so I can watch out for your letter. If you make a deposit into my Paypal account Paypal will inform me and I will send you a thank you email and keep you informed of my circumstances.
Regards to you all,
Marky

well I have the dated and time stamped auto responses of paypal and the FBI cyber crimes reporting so the chances that this scam of your can do me any real harm is close to nil

you were report to your news host aeio.org, but I doubt they will do anything indeed the only wild card is Pay pal having involved them in a fraudulanet sheme this way may piss them off enough to push Law Enforcement into looking into you presumed wisemen but certainly an unwisemen

and likely to be more effective is making sure your bloging NOT friends know what you have hatched, and I have aprasied your former targets over in Nimbusters of your scheme

you manged to waste oh about 30 minutes of my time I hope you think that was a worth while efforts

It's too bad some fat fucking pizza boy has to ruin a free service for everyone that might want to post on topic.

Cross post the troll shite to alt.free.newsservers. I know for a fact that the generous owner of that free server reads every post in that group.

Like I already said, hat's off to someone providing free posting priv, and to hell with anyone using it for a troll port. (lloyd davies)

Read that again. You aren't a Usenet admin, and an "official message" is one which has been posted to a news group by an admin. That message would probably be the one posted by Paul Schleck at about that time.

Wiseman and Morgan both have ham licenses and are responsible for at least 90% of the spam in here. Morgan even has seven or eight nyms he uses so that he can exceed (and abuse) Google's posting limits.

Schleck wanted to make this a moderated group. The admins said "no" and now are going to remove it completely, if you believe this message.

I say leave it alone. Let Morgan and Wiseman remain here while the rest of us move elsewhere when we want serious discussion. Robeson has wisely gone to a web board, as have most other serious posters. I won't name the board, because I don't want to give Morgan or his play pals any additional information.

Sure you have.

In this very forum.

Why do you presume to be mistruthful when your actions have been ehre for all to see, Mork?

If you meant COURTESY, you were blatantly lying, Mork.

No, I didn't...But I don't see any reason to expect you to say anything different.

Morkie, you need to get your temper under control, fatboy. Your already miserable grammar get's worse by the minute as you try to out-lie your last lie.

You've never had your life threatened by me, Mork.

Of course you don't. I wouldn't expect you to acknowledge them in any case.

I've started threads for the specific purpose of "cooling off"
with you and you've blatantly trashed each and every one of them.

Yet YOU keep brining it up.

Any one generated by you is a lie, Mork.

Yet another lie, Mork.

You've repeatedly tried to imply that English Common Law was the only valid law. Ergo you obviously DO care.

I can dig some of those posts up and rub your nose in those too,
if you care.

Mork, WHY do you insist on trying to perpetuate yet another of your lies?

I've never said such a thing.

You're welcome to try and find such in archives, but you'll only die tired doing it.

Nope.

It's all you can do, Mork.

You can't respond with RATIONAL responses, so everything is "lier"
and other such silliness.

Nope.

Nope...YOU did.

Jim Miccolis has "opposed" me before.

So has Hans.

Frankie of Silliland.

And a whole host of others.

The only ones who don't get so-labled are those who have obviously demonstrated predisposition to pedophilia...Such as you and Toidie.

The medium has nothing to do with it.

You only use it as an excuse.

Of course your life is one slapped together excuse after another,
so what's one more, right?

education that you never got.

Who's the "aggressor"...?!?!

Me, or the guy who keeps re-addressing these post to a newsgroup to whom the content is not germane?

Yes, I AM a teacher. And if you were in my class, you'd be spending a lot of time in suspension.

About your WHAT...?!?!

What's an "mperant"...?!?!

> we aren't you man enough to keep your attack between those in the NG?

This taunt coming from a putz who keeps readdressing these posts
to a non-germane newsgroup!

And Morke...Your grammar is worsening by the minute!

"No, you don't"....what...?!?!

> > > yes I do

You are not a degreed person, Morkie.

Until you provide some reference to an established educational institution that can be verified, each and every time you insist that you have a college degree you're simply lying.

It really is THAT simple.

> > > > Not a single one.

It's not libel if it's true.

Go ahead...Take a head-to-toe picture of yourself holding today's
"USA Today" paper and post it here.

Do it...Prove me wrong.

Make an excuse, prove me right.

Fatboy.

Then you prove me RIGHT, Mork!

Thanks!

Huh?

Let's keep this in English, Mork.

You "refuse" because the answer is "Mark C. Morgan, KB9RQZ, does not have a ollege degree from any institution at any degree level in any discipline"

I doubt you "attenedd: school anywhere.

I imagine you were kept at home...Much like Oswald Cobblepot.

Nope.

YOU have insisted that YOU have college degrees.

YOU refuse to identify by whom.

I am using PUBLIC RECORDS to prove you a liar.

So far. it's working!

> > Michigan either.

So?

What does your age have to do with where you receieve a college degree?

None at all, Morkie.

Duhhh...ya think? Or was that age of 21 a give-away?

You're right about that. I don't obsess like you think I do.

I've not turned up much, and I doubt I ever will.

Period.

You can't comprehend English for a single post.

It's not libel when it's true.

"sinable"...Yes, Morkie...You are one of the most sinable people I know!

HOW do you think telling us what your college degrees are is going to do to "stalk" you, Mork?

I already know what you look like, where you live, and a whole host of other information I am sure you'd rather I not know.

You won't "identify" you college degrees since you CAN'T. You don't have any.

> when we first "met' you showed enough skill to provoke me to unwise

Yetr another untruth, Morkie.

You continue to make "unwise statements" to this very day.

For example..."I have three college degrees" is one of them.

There you go again.

I am sure I can. Just love making fun of an idiot who says he has three college degrees yet can't demonstrate the skills or knowledge of a 3rd grade education.

Asked but avoided.

Nothing I say about you is "libel"...It's not libel because it's true.

Nope.

YOU have proven that your asserions of multiple college degrees was a lie, Mork.

> > But I guess that's too much for you.

But obviously not smart enough to keep from making a fool out of yourself, Mork.

You're doing THAT very well!

I am doing just fine.

So far...You're the loser I have always claimed.

RRAP.

You claimed you have college degrees.

You won't prove it.

You can't.

It has everything to do with you making up tales about things you

It's not what I "like", Mork...It's just yet another example of your incompetence with the language.

Sure you do! You repeatedly claim that you are perfectly competent with English grammar, construction and comprehension when it's PAINFULLY clear that you are none of that!

In the foregoing you accused me of not being familiar with teh concept of time.

This is the third time you've responded to the fact that this is an argument that is only "months" old (not the 'years' you keep suggesting) with "so?"

You only serve to prove yourself a fool, Morkie.

rrap is a good place to keep Wiseman et al. If they are busy here, they won't disrupt serious discussion elsewhere.

There are no sociopaths on QRZ.com or QTH.com. Both Fred, AA7BQ and Scott, KA9FOX do a great job, by quickly and permanently throwing nut cases off their boards.
We owe both these gentlemen much, for giving us a place to go

Someone is playing pranks with forged messages. There is no official plan to delete rec.radio.amateur.policy, nor will there be. There was a previous forged message in the same vein with a bogus Request for Discussion (RFD) for a rec.radio.amateur.policy.moderated newsgroup. This was a counterfeit RFD, modified from an actual RFD for soc.men.moderated. This latest counterfeit post was based on a deletion announcement for one of the obsolete comp.sources.* newsgroups, many of which haven't been used in over a decade. I wonder if it was the same individual who was sending forged messages, in my name, through the aioe.org news server. The administrators at aioe.org assure me that such forgeries are now blocked. Thanks go to them for their interest in promptly and decisively dealing with that unfortunate incident. If another Usenet post appears to be from me, you can authenticate it by the Path and other headers indicating it is from Novia/Newscene, and not another source. I also do not use obscene language in my posts, including phonetics for my callsign.

The only effort towards a moderated rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroup that I am aware of is still in the planning stages, and will be for a new moderated discussion newsgroup that will leave the existing newsgroups alone. No one in authority has said "no" to us. In fact, we have a Usenet Group Mentor assigned and are working towards a proposal. I posted a message to the rec.radio.amateur.policy newsgroup previously, calling for volunteer moderators. Response has been sufficient that we now have a suitable moderation team and can move forward. Watch this newsgroup, and news.groups, for further information later this summer/early fall. In accordance with Usenet group creation procedures, there will be multiple announcements, and ample opportunity for interested parties to debate and vote on any proposal for a new newsgroup.

To confirm what I suspect everyone here already knew - this is not true. The "proposal" referenced was never even introduced anywhere, let alone considered.

Of course you don't. I wouldn't expect you to acknowledge them in any case.

I've started threads for the specific purpose of "cooling off"
with you and you've blatantly trashed each and every one of them.

Yet another lie, Mork.

You've repeatedly tried to imply that English Common Law was the only valid law. Ergo you obviously DO care.

I can dig some of those posts up and rub your nose in those too,
if you care.

Mork, WHY do you insist on trying to perpetuate yet another of

I've never said such a thing.

die tired doing it.

It's all you can do, Mork.

Jim Miccolis has "opposed" me before.

So has Hans.

Frankie of Silliland.

And a whole host of others.

The only ones who don't get so-labled are those who have obviously demonstrated predisposition to pedophilia...Such as you and Toidie.

Yes, I AM a teacher. And if you were in my class, you'd be spending a lot of time in suspension.

> and more libel on your part about my mperant

About your WHAT...?!?!

What's an "mperant"...?!?!

> we aren't you man enough to keep your attack between those in the NG?

This taunt coming from a putz who keeps readdressing these posts
to a non-germane newsgroup!

And Morke...Your grammar is worsening by the minute!

"No, you don't"....what...?!?!

> > > yes I do

You are not a degreed person, Morkie.

Until you provide some reference to an established educational institution that can be verified, each and every time you insist that you have a college degree you're simply lying.

It really is THAT simple.

> > > > Not a single one.

It's not libel if it's true.

Go ahead...Take a head-to-toe picture of yourself holding today's
"USA Today" paper and post it here.

Do it...Prove me wrong.

Fatboy.

Thanks!

Huh?

Let's keep this in English, Mork.

You "refuse" because the answer is "Mark C. Morgan, KB9RQZ, does not have a ollege degree from any institution at any degree level in any discipline"

> > So far, I've done some searching in Illinois and come up with

I doubt you "attenedd: school anywhere.

I imagine you were kept at home...Much like Oswald Cobblepot.

> but you are admiting to stalking me

Nope.

YOU have insisted that YOU have college degrees.

YOU refuse to identify by whom.

I am using PUBLIC RECORDS to prove you a liar.

So far. it's working!

> why look there? you know I am in my 40's when I arived in Michigan

So?

What does your age have to do with where you receieve a college degree?

None at all, Morkie.

> > I found one "Mark C. Morgan" currently

Duhhh...ya think? Or was that age of 21 a give-away?

You're right about that. I don't obsess like you think I do.

I've not turned up much, and I doubt I ever will.

Period.

You can't comprehend English for a single post.

It's not libel when it's true.

"sinable"...Yes, Morkie...You are one of the most sinable people I know!

HOW do you think telling us what your college degrees are is going to do to "stalk" you, Mork?

I already know what you look like, where you live, and a whole host of other information I am sure you'd rather I not know.

You won't "identify" you college degrees since you CAN'T. You don't have any.

> when we first "met' you showed enough skill to provoke me to unwise

Yetr another untruth, Morkie.

You continue to make "unwise statements" to this very day.

For example..."I have three college degrees" is one of them.

There you go again.

I am sure I can. Just love making fun of an idiot who says he has three college degrees yet can't demonstrate the skills or knowledge of a 3rd grade education.

Asked but avoided.

Nothing I say about you is "libel"...It's not libel because it's true.

Nope.

YOU have proven that your asserions of multiple college degrees was
a lie, Mork.

> > But I guess that's too much for you.

But obviously not smart enough to keep from making a fool out of
yourself, Mork.

You're doing THAT very well!

I am doing just fine.

So far...You're the loser I have always claimed.

RRAP.

Nope.

You claimed you have college degrees.

You won't prove it.

You can't.

It has everything to do with you making up tales about things you

No, you've not.

It's not what I "like", Mork...It's just yet another example of
your incompetence with the language.

competent with English grammar, construction and comprehension when
it's PAINFULLY clear that you are none of that!

In the foregoing you accused me of not being familiar with teh
concept of time.

This is the third time you've responded to the fact that this is an argument that is only "months" old (not the 'years' you keep suggesting) with "so?"

You only serve to prove yourself a fool, Morkie.

OK then, Since we all want to be proficient, how about this:

Step 1: No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

Step 2: The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Step 3: Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Step 4: Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

<<snip>> exactly the same proposals SC has made before, concerning which he's stated that "99%" of the people on USENET "hate", and which contain positions even more radical than those which have already been rejected by the FCC.

Trolling again, SC? Pity. If you were actually willing to engage in a productive discussion you might actually do some good, but I don't see any evidence of that.

Usenet itself doesn't matter any more and is slowly going the way of the dinosaurs. Look at these newsgroups as an example of why real radio discussion is carried on elswhere. People like Mark are like the squatters which still inhabit an otherwise abandoned city.

Want to keep up with amateur radio policy and activities? You need to go to a web site these days, perhaps http://www.qrz.com or http://www.arrl.org. Have something for sale or trade? The pages of http://www.qth.com may hold the answer for you. If not, you can always go to Ebay.

Is there a specialized topic that interests you? Again, if you want to discuss something while remaining unmolested by the Mark Morgans of the world, you probably will find what you want on the web. I find extremely useful broadband information at http://broadbandreports.com that simply can't be found on Usenet at all.

Usenet is basically a wasteland which is very close to death. Even AOL realized that was the case and shut down its own news servers a couple of years ago.

Mostly misfits remain on Usenet, and they'll remain here until some admin somewhere finally pulls the plug on the last nntp server. Until that time, attention seekers like Mark Morgan will continue to provoke anyone they can into paying attention to them.

And people like me will oblige by making fun of Mark. It is, after all, what he really wants.
You are correct. Mark craves attention and will attempt to get it any way he can. If this means flaming or spamming, he has no qualms about doing so.
(makes you wonder about his personal life)
Exchanging comments with Mark is, as one poster said, a waste of your time.
I agree with the poster in that Mark is what? A spammer? Yes, he thrives on the attention and even misses Wiseman when he is absent. Ever note that Mark, when he is bored, actually goes looking for Wiseman and Steve? He goes out of his way to antagonize them.

This is why the best thing the rest of us can do will be to simply ignore Mark. As the poster said, Mark is a nobody. A nonentity. Mark dislikes being told he is a nobody and especially dislikes being ignored.
Kill file him if you can, or simply do not respond to him. It is just that simple.

ok, I was there for your anti puppy love foeging.

You should know about one of mine.

That I didn't even realize I HAD!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

I came across a stray cbs site.

(ok, I'm trying to come up with a stupid pattern to crochet a coaster out of those wasteful AOL cd's!!! And it hits me this morning about 6 am that the CBS eye would be great, if I can figure it out. Which is why I'm still at work over 3 hours later!)

Anyway, came across a site for Randolph Mantooth who was in Emergency, a show I used to love.

He got to be a REAL cutie as he's gotten older, THEN I discover, he's got Indian blood, well NO WONDER.

Anyway, look at his photos. You may agree. I could hang out with him.

The "proof" is yours to provide, Morkie.

Nope.

YOU are Morkie...Delusional if you thing ANYONE except youreself believe these ramblings that you have three college degrees.

Sure I am.

I am the guy who keeps making a fool out of you with your own words.

Of course it's within YOUR providence to prove me wrong and just name the schools you "graduated" from, yet you keep refusing to do so.

Probably just as well. I'd bet they'd just as well NOT be known

Mork, the one "disconnected" from the real world is the Short Bus Rider of Chadssell that insists he has three college degrees but can't put a single sentence together correctly!

Specificly, YOU!

It's not "libel" when it's true, fatboy.

Take my calling you "fatboy"...See, THAT is not libel either.
You're male (more or less) and you're fat.

That was someone else, Morkie.

But your insistance to the contrary eversince has been hilarious!

Nope.

YOU insist that you have those degrees.

YOU refuse to say from where or in what disciplines.

I SAY you're a liar.

So far, I'm winning.

I have no "vendatetas", Mork (It's VENDETTA).

And they are not attacks...They are opportunites to make fun of you with your own words.

If YOU would stop and think about what you were going to say and HOW you say it, I'd have nothing to play with...

Sure it is.

I don't know a single other degreed person that is as incompetent with the language as you are.

Not a one.

And that you can't produce the name of even ONE institution proves it.

What "peers", Morkie?

That NG isn't used by anyone in CAP! It's had five "legitimate" posts in the last 36 months, and THOSE were by non-CAP members on non-CAP topics!

If you meant BORING, you're lying again since you've gone to the

The mental illness is yours, Morkie.

You think that everyone is going to just accept your word that you have degrees when it's crystal clear that the only time you've ever been on a college campus was as janitorial staff.

Nope.

You claim you have college degrees.

You can't even produce the name of a college you've graduated from, let alone a copy of a diploma.

Ergo, you've lied, and nothing I've said is untrue.

Anything you have for the last 40+ years proves that you were

No problem.

Again.

Huge snip.

Well, Morkie...the rest f the poswas just more of your dodging the truth, the truth being that you are an uneducated slob. You like being a slob. Why, I'll never know or understand, but I do know you're in Apologize for what?

If you want an apology for something, PROVE that I am wrong.

i woudl raly like to know why cap expects to be taken serious but refuses to apply the most basic standards of profesionism to its members

amoug the tactics he uses are massivee amounts of unsupported charges and alegeations to try and try his victum out and make unable to respond

then of course he wlaks away till most but his victum have lost memeory of his libels andsatrts all over again haven't posted this count in awhile but since robeson has shown to libel and lie 3 day in row id it it poper on 28 dec 2005 yu claim you were suing and that I would be served soon

it is 206 days later

you are proven a liar, and according to you if you lie one time everything you say may be considered a lie of Course I knw the reason I was served no papers youtold some twisted version to a alwyer who siad based on that fiction you could sue me, but when you provide your "evidence" you showed how distroted your view of reality was and were told you had no case as predeicted at the tiem you would spend the next months lies and spining your way around this this fact and such has come to pass

If you're referring to Mr. Davies, I don't think the post was by him.

He's on a well-earned sabbatical leave from Papa John's and has gone to spend a few months in the contemplative life at profit Stair's monastery.

He'll be contemplating false predictions and "young colored girls" under the tutelage of none other than the profit himself.

I think Mr. Davies has been selected from tens of thousands of candidates to succeed the aging profit and will now become the new "profit in training".

Look for Mr. Davies in the picture files at http://www.overcomerministry.org/ - he'll surely be included soon.

Maybe there'll be candids of him meditating "out behind the barn" with Sister Tameka and Sister Rasheeka and Sister LaWanda and Sister RaShanda.

Too bad Mr. Davies will be out of town during Huntsville hamfest.

But I'm sure he'd prefer to be making false predictions with the "young colored girls" over a delivering pizza to a bunch of geeky old ham operators any day.

Someone either has a similar name to mine, or assumed my identity.

It is interesting to point out that once again Eric Oyen is involved in online trouble. Eric has been a LOOONG time generator of problems online in usenet groups and he has a proven track record of usenet remember correctly) Mr. Jimmy Dale, whom I do not know.

Eric is a well known pathetic trouble maker.

Welcome back, Y-Man - someone suggested that you were out having a

Oh, my. Are you saying that Mark has more than one sig? You know, our Mark who constantly whines that he is being libeled? The very same Mark who accuses others of being forgers? The same Mark who cannot live a day without accusing "Wismen" or Steve of harassing him? This wouldn't be the same Mark who posts sixty or more posts daily, would it?
Yeah, I must have my "Mark Morgans" mixed up.

I thought you were referring to the Mark Morgan who posted a recent request for donations to help him pay his bills. I have to admit that his recent post almost made me feel sorry for Mark Morgan, but not quite. Times must be tough up there in Michigan. Maybe Wismen can loan him a few sheckles, or whatever the exchange rate is in Israel.

CAP is not part and parcel of this forum, Morkie.

I do not sign my posts as a member.

That's 'all you'. Morkie.

CAP has no scope of authority over this forum. Thier only interest would be if I was representing my comments as being those of the CAP organization itself.

They are not, of course.

There's no libel here, Mork.

And Mork...

Before you flail about representing yourself as an allegedly victimised Veteran of the US Army, you should know that all of the people who need to know KNOW about YOUR misrepresentation of yourself as a field grade officer in the Army.

No one buys your claims of "The FBI said it was OK to lie".

No one you will send mail to will be impressed with your claims.
They have already been presented with copies of YOUR posts with YOUR claims of being an officer when indeed you weren't.

They are interested in your posts wherein you have repeatedly stated that you consider it "OK" to intentionally lie and your insistance that you will lie ad lib.

That pretty much zero'ed out any credibility that you might have had.

Once again, Mork, you are your own worst enemy.

Frankie made as big a fool out of himself as either of the two of Sure you do.

You can't help yourself, Mork.

You keep making assinine statements that I rub your nose in, then you try to get me to stop by your spamming of the "al.military.cap" NG.

> you inistance that my reufsaul to do so alters reality is proof you are

Your refusal to validate YOUR claims proves you to be the liar and loser that I insist you are, Mork.

There are no college degrees in your name. There is no commission as an officer in the Armed Forces. There is no business license for a business in your name.

I seriously doubt that YOU took the test for KB9RQZ, but I'll allow you ONE bit of doubt.

In other words, your refusal to prove your claims has nothing to do with impressing me...It has EVERYTHING to do with proving to anyone and everyone else that's reading this forum that you're the liar I claim you are.

It reall is THAT simple.

Not really. You made it quite easy to believe.

All >>>I<<< asked for was a picture of the two of you with a current 'USA Today' in front of you. Slacks or a nice sundress will be

Nope..the assertion that you're married to a female is YOURS,

Nope...I've been asking for the same information for weeks now.

In any case, so far still no record of a Mark C. Morgan having

Guess you Feeble Five fellas are ALL pretty clueless on who the Ironic that four of the five of you claim to be vets, but not a

Of course nothing's "on topic", Brain. Fatboy's legacy pretty well has ruined the NG for some time to come.

And of course you "pop over" only to join the fray in a non-contributary, confrontational manner...yet of course you always claim that I am the only one who does that and no one else does.

Bzzzzttt....wrong. The problem is the old farts fought changes for so long that the population got interested in other things like computers and Internet. I mean who the heck wants to learn old, outdated code in an Internet world. It's not "dumbing down" it's antiquated and not needed. Sure it's fun if you want to learn it, but why force people to learn something that is just not necessary? It's not. The change away from code should have been made 20 years ago.

Actually, you apparently don't even listen to 11 meters because if you did, you would hear a very quiet band. They've left for the Internet and cell phones.

I don't know where you come up with this stuff you have been spewing out lately, but you are grossly out of touch with reality.

There's nothing wrong with appliance operators. Let people communicate and communicate easily. This is the age of easy to use radios. Radios with silicon and not old, big, hot glass tubes. The world always changes and you have to learn to change with it.

So give up your buggy whip, get down from your horse, and learn to drive a car. We're not going to test you on animal husbandry as it applies to horses in order for you to get a license to drive a modern car. It's not dumbing down, it's just evolution.

No, please tell us how requiring code tests and more difficult technical testing creates a "more proficient" ham?

When code testing was 13/20 WPM and the technical tests were much harder, we still had all the idiots on the bands. Those idiots are not more proficient. You are simply ignoring reality. Do you live in a cave

a new and new posts posts of Steve trying to maintian that he is not lying in saying he will sue me why not just give it up?

becuase Robeson maintains that telling even one lie means everything you say a say is a lie and by admitting to his lie (which he was provoked into making BY ME for the ends of hopefully emabrishing hi m enough to admit he was mistaken in calling me a child molestor rapist and the rest of his years of libel)

catalyst is exactly the right word

he has operated by making defamitory charges against his latest victum and waitied for the realy unstable types to pick it up and libel the same target with the libel with Wisemen the normal co Cospritor this normaly result in driving off the target becuase they cant stand the relentless harrassment and Maj Robeson tries to then blame and harrass the vitum of these attack for the whole thing you can verify some of this by looking at Robeson posting history but given the volume he has put out it isn't easy, or pleasent reading other parts I can't prove but I believe for example what I know about the charge made that I abuse my father, sexauly, and otherwise, is that it was made by an LPN licensed in TN given the history between Robeson and the fact he is the only LPN I know of from TN I form the opinion I do on his guilt

I know the call to my home made in '98 answered by my father as I was out of town at the time was traceble only to the ac where Robeson lives and followed apost By Robeson (posting then as ERLPN@aol.com) reciting his skill with weapons and ending with the phrase "one shot one kill even in <name of the twon I was then living in>"

I also know my father was frigthen very badly by the call could somebody be setting Robeson up yes it is possible I agree but Robeson shows no interest in even following that line claim. what he does maintain that my being Bisexaul and the fact I will lie about thing in threatening or dangerous sitution justifies his accusing me of child molesting Rape , justifies his inistance that my wife is male, that I have AIDS and other STD's etc

as I said I was geting from when I was offline so I decided I might as well be online

The claim was "more proficient", not "generally nicer and better able to get along with people". There will always be idiots in <insert any field> but a ham who can't copy code at 1 wpm isn't more proficient (or as proficient) at communicating under any and all conditions as one who can.

Someone who can do something is, by definition, more proficient at doing it than someone who can't. Requiring code tests and real technical testing (the current tests are a joke) makes sure that most of the people who get licensed are more proficient at receiving code and with technical matters.

Yup, points to Cecil for realizing this.

Based on similar turns of phrase in a private E-mail message sent to me recently (of the usual, unhinged, "I didn't ask to be welcomed to this newsgroup!" variety), I can say with great likelihood that the perpetrator of this forgery is the individual who posts on rec.radio.amateur.policy with the E-mail address "wussyroger@yahoo.com." I sent a complaint to alt.net and altopia.com in case they caught the poster in their logs.

It seems that we've really, really hit a raw nerve here among the unbalanced trolls who populate rec.radio.amateur.policy. They very much seem to fear the prospect that a new, moderated discussion newsgroup for amateur radio stands a good chance of getting created, one that will leave them behind.

I suspect that there will continue to be a storm of retaliatory forgeries for some time to come, at least through the fall. As I said previously, check the headers. If something appears to be from me, and is not from Novia/Newscene, then it's a forgery. Check also for misspellings, poor grammar, and obscene language.

Oh, it's a forgery alright, unless he doesn't know how to spell his own name. He spelled it correctly once, mispelled it twice, and none of the domains resolve. And the sender was not using his ISP, which is easy to find.

A little attention to details, checking of headers, plus google goes a long way folks.

Al, someone who passes a code test should be more proficient in code than someone who cannot pass the code test. That simply makes that person proficient in code, not necessarily a more proficient operator.

You may be able to use the code, but if you cannot use modern digital methods, use sat communication, able to handle emergency communication, able to set up digital networks and use them effectively, build modern solid-state equipment, etc., then you are not a more proficient amateur operator, you just are more proficient in code and that is not going to help us much in the 21st Century.

As I said before, PSK31 can be copied when the human ear cannot even hear the signal, if you cannot hear code, you cannot copy it period. So code is no longer the be-all-end-all. Modern 21st communication methods have replaced it.

If we are going to attract new people to the service, we need to get into the 21st Century and get the old farts away from the old code and tubes crap.

should be? I beg you pardon

well I know can't pass a code test and I can use Morse code did a few eme contacts using a spectrograph to make out the didt and dah and feedto an pc for translation I have done the same (with code reader as well) to see if I could do that made a sweep in a cw sweepstakes (with aid of another hams call)

Setting up digital networks may not be particularly practical in the early days right after a large scale disaster. Satellite passes are short and if you don't have internet access to look up pass times, you may be up the proverbial creek without the proverbial paddle if you rely too much on that form of communications. Even with the pass info, the passes are too short to be useful for handling very much emergency communication.

Yes it is true that PSK31 can be copied when you cannot hear it. However, it is useless when there are ionospheric disturbances that cause phase shifts (solar flares with the attendent aurora come to mind). This happens on a fairly regular basis. In addition, although the signal you are putting out is low power, PSK31 has a fairly high power consumption requirement since a computer is essential in the system. If you have limited power resources, it may not be a wise choice.

While code is not the end-all and be-all, it still has its place in list of communications methods. Let us go back to the auroral activity. The various digital modes fail first. Voice holds up a little bit longer getting distorted but sometimes still copyable. Code holds up a bit longer, being still copyable when voice becomes too distorted. Under auroral conditions, both voice and code fare better than digital.

Every single method has a valid place in the list of communications methods. Every mode has its strong points and its weak points. In my opinion, hams should be able to use as many modes as possible and that includes code.

The major drawback to code is that it requires people to develop a skill rather than being a matter of just slapping parts together. Heck, I don't any skill in soldering as I've soldered only about 4 items in my life but I built both myself and my OM PSK31 interfaces in about 1/2 hour each. They were two of those four items.

I find that it is the "old farts" who are doing most of the exotic activities. When I work PSK31, I come across many seniors working this mode with the latest radios and computers. When I work VHF/UHF contests and look up the call signs afterwards, it is mostly the experience hams that I run across.

You have let your disdain for the code blind you to its merits. As I stated above, EVERY mode has its strengths and weaknesses and its place in wireless communications.

Dee, the issue is that many old hams know CW, but cannot operate most new digital modes. But if I understand what you are saying, if a 20 WPM Extra Class ham only operates CW and maybe SSB is less proficient than a 5 WPM Technician that operates on 10 different digital modes. See the 10 modes is more than CW and SSB, that ham is more proficient. Then I guess I agree with you.

Your comments on setting up networks, sat communication, and digital modes show that you have little knowledge on either. For instance, it depends on the sat orbit how long it is useful.

If PSK cannot be used due to ionospheric disturbances, well then either can CW. Computers can be operated on battery or generator. You are going to need something to power the radio right? Does not take much more for a laptop and with digital modes, the power can be much less so there is more power for the laptop.

Your comparison of voice, digital modes and CW shows you have little knowledge of what you are talking about. I have personally used digital modes when voice and CW were not able to be copied.

Finally, I happen to like CW a lot. But I don't think it makes anyone a better operator for knowing it, you should not be tested on it anymore than any other mode. Yes, there are a lot of seniors using digital, but there are too many more hanging on to the old crap CW only and tubes.

The original claim wasn't that it makes him more proficient in everything, just that it makes him a more proficient operator. Being equal in everything else, but more proficient in code, makes one more proficient.

Is logic a lost art?

And, if there's effectively no testing, which is the current case, how do you propose that we get operators who CAN "use modern digital
methods, use sat communication, able to handle emergency communication
...", etc? Wishing makes it so?

>As I said before, PSK31 can be copied when the human ear cannot even

CW can be copied below the noise. Whether it can be copied as far below the noise as PSK31 can is a good question. With the amount of experience I have with both modes, I think I can safely say that CW can be copied further into the noise than PSK31 can. (You need SOME detectable original signal for PSK31 to work - after all, you have to be able to detect the phase shift. CW can be copied even if it's nothing more than modulated noise. And, if there are any old sounder

> So code is no longer the be-all-end-all. Modern 21st communication methods

It never was all there is, but let's see you use "modern 21st communication methods" in an emergency situation when all you have is a source of RF - nothing to modulate it with. Going to yell at the oscillator and hope it's microphonic enough to produce some NBFM?

>If we are going to attract new people to the service, we need to get

They said that in the 50s too - "we have modern communications like SSB - who needs CW?" ... yet CW still lives. I doubt it'll be a requirement in 100 years , but I also doubt that no one will be able to copy it.

Thanks for the memories. I enjoyed "the barrel" in the late '50s. No one who works voice on aurora will ever forget what it sounds like. Or forget working half-way across the country with 5 watts on 6 with a TV antenna.

The problem is that a lot of people think that all the "skill" operating takes is being able to turn the equipment on. Even using an appliance rig, it's easy to tell the appliance operators from those who have developed some skill.

And many of us know CW, originated some digital modes (you think repeaters (thanks, Norm) before most current hams were even born.

Not true - the human brain is a more efficient detector than a

You can get a CW signal to anywhere in the world with a 9 volt battery for a few hours. You can't run a pocket PC on that kind of power.

And I have personally used CW when digital modes weren't even detectable, let alone copyable. So have many people who have used CW for extremely low signal work. Try decoding a PSK signal that's been bounced off an aurora. (The phase is constantly rolling - there's nothing for the detector to detect.) Aurora CW sounds weird (okay, it makes "weird" boring), but it's easy to copy.

Okay - the same then. You're tested on your ability to understand English, and to read the written word - that covers voice and digital.
Let's test for CW. Not "more", just "same".

it s the same mistake you make with my postings "lloyd" while you are

So you've been receiving complaints since 1999, yet have kept on sending unsolicited email (UE) anyway.

What a stellar track record.

Your "logic" for continuing your UE ("My ISP lets me do it.") is very similar to Mark Morgan's logic for continuing his ongoing flood of rrap. Will you stop the UE once you have created your own moderated group in which to play?

Somehow I doubt it.

I still hold to the belief, claim, whatever that knowing CW in itself, does not make an operator more proficient in anything but CW. I would even submit that some operators who only use CW are less proficient operators than a modern ham who uses many more modes and methods, including modern digital modes, to communicate. Follow the logic Al. Someone who is versed in more facets of Amateur Radio than simply CW is a more proficient operator. Yes, I guess you are correct, logic is a lost art.

No, desire does. Every amateur has their niche that they want to pursue. Forcing a CW test on someone does not make them have a desire to use it. In fact, forcing someone to test on an archaic mode of communication may in fact keep them away from the service and therefore they will never develop an interest in learning and using modern communication methods.

Al, you seem to have trouble reading. I never mentioned copying below the noise level. What I said was CW cannot be copied if the human ear cannot hear it. I have copied PSK when the audio of the signal could not be copied by the human ear. It's just that simple. All the BS about CW being the only true weak signal mode is well just BS. There are superior modes to CW and PSK is one of them.

Yup, if all you have is a source of RF and nothing else, I guess you are screwed. But that is not reality. You would have a real problem if you did not have a source of RF, gee Al, let's call it a transmitter and use big people words. I wonder why NASA does not have CW capability on the Shuttle and Space Station - you know, just in case. Why have our armed forces stopped using it? What happens in war if all they have is a transmitter? Get real.

Yup CW still lives and it will go on for quite awhile. Forcing people to learn and use it is not the way to keep it going. It probably won't be a requirement in 5 to 10 years. I guess that is just evolution. Out with the old and in with the new.

Next you'll tell us that the sun rises in the East. Thank you, Captain Obvious.

Knowledge of any single thing doesn't make an operator more proficient in anything but that one thing. Should we have testing in TV techniques, simply because it's a "modern communications mode"? How about microwaves? Programming? Hey, there's one I'd go for. Let's be "modern" and make sure that hams can program the computers they're using for "communications".

Someone who is versed in more facets of amateur radio than simply modern digital modes is also a more proficient operator. Can YOU set up an internet audio stream without following a set of instructions?

It sure is.

No one said that CW is the only weak signal mode, but it can sometimes be copied when it's weaker than any other mode can be copied. If the noise frequency is higher than the bit frequency ... well, you know weak signal analysis, right? Or you wouldn't be discussing it, would you?

Oh, but CW takes MUCH less power for the same path than any digital mode, and CW is the ONLY mode you can use when the only thing you have is a source of RF.

>Yup, if all you have is a source of RF and nothing else, I guess you are

Until you have a radio with a broken voice or data circuit and the only thing standing between you and safety is your inability to communicate because the radio's broken.

>You would have a real problem if you >did not have a source of RF, gee Al, let's call it a transmitter and use

Excuse me? They sure do.

>Why have our armed forces stopped using it? What happens in war if >all they have is a transmitter? Get real.

You're comparing military intelligence to actual intelligence? They die. Soldiers have been known to do that in combat. The prime mission of the military in wartime is NOT saving the lives of individual soldiers, it's winning wars at the COST of the lives of individual soldiers. Why don't YOU "get real"?

>Yup CW still lives and it will go on for quite awhile. Forcing people >to learn and use it is not the way to keep it going.

Neither is forcing them to learn electronics. Or the laws they're going to have to know. Let's just post ham licenses in stores and people can pick them up if they like. Just like they used to do with CB licenses. Why keep anyone from having access to a public property? Just let anyone buy a radio (no knowledge of how to even build a kit should be required) and use it. Those of us who want to learn something can petition for a new service that requires actual knowledge of something.

Actually, now that you mention it, that's a fair offer. If the moderated newsgroup is created, I will retire the first-time-poster welcome message service. Now, the moderated newsgroup itself will likely have some sort of autoreply to acknowledge submissions. But autoreplies to posts to the unmoderated groups would then cease.

So, if you want the welcome messages to cease to the unmoderated rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroups, express support for the moderated newsgroup during the Request For Discussion (RFD) and vote for its creation during the Call For Votes (CFV). Watch for these announcements sometime late summer/early fall.

Deal?

you are the one that failed the class

I did not

CW currently stands as more imprtant than the rest of HAMradio combined for HF access

CW is not anyway near that valuble

therefore the current testing system is ilgoical

BTW to answer your red herring from another thread No one is proposing adding a test on digital mode

I am a new ham and will respond to this based on being new. I got my license last year at age 48 so I'm neither a kid nor a senior. I've been tested and scored at 136 so I'm not a genius but am far from a dummy. I mention these things to give a general picture of who I am and where my position comes from.

Radio Buff wrote:

Although I see the reasoning behind this request I disagree. There are older hams who wouldn't be able to pass their license class test but who still enjoy participating in their nets and talking to their circle of ham friends. I don't want to be the one to take that away from a senior ham who is hurting absolutely no one by enjoying their hobby. The fact they might not pass the Extra test means nothing.

Radio Buff isn't going to want to give up enjoying radio when he/she is older and can't pass the exam either.

> The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

I have no problem with this provided the exam is similar. If you want to raise the minimum score required while also increasing the difficulty level of the exam by 20-25% the combination will make it too difficult for many. You will kill amateur radio because there will be far fewer coming into the hobby than going SK.

> Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Code should not be a part of the license test anymore than PSK or any other operating mode. There are so many different ways to enjoy and utilize amateur radio today that were not available decades ago that make code no longer a necessity. Mandating code skills is now similar to mandating slide rule skills for an engineer. It is an excellent tool and anyone capable of using it has a true skill. That said, there is nothing that can't be done by one without slide rule skills. They may be at a disadvantage at certain times and in certain specific locations and scenarios but for the most part the individual with the slide rule skills has no true advantage today as they did a few decades ago. The same holds true with code.

I do believe there should be a segment of the bands each license class is authorized that is reserved for those with code in their license. It just shouldn't be a requirement any longer. It keeps otherwise intelligent and capable people away from the hobby and the goal should be to bring them in not keep them away.

> Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

This point is pointless with the sensible approach outlined above.

I know you're right.

Hams just want to be appliance operators these days and they don't want license exams that will interfere with them getting to those appliances even though it means being less worthy. I don't see anyone modernizing like everyone says is happening. They just get their licenses and grab a microphone. What percentage of hams have a computer connected to a radio? Probably less than 30%. Hams don't want to modernize. Guess we just have live with inferior operators on the bands from here on out.
Then again, maybe hams shouldn't be required to be knowledgable or have skills. Requiring skills and knowledge is too old skool. Everything must be outcome based these days, even licensing. It ain't like we have to help out in emergencies or anything. It's Quantity, not quality.

Yes it does mean something. It means they're appliance operators. They pass their exams once then forget everything and don't want to advance themselves anymore or be proficient hams. They're not an asset to the service, they're just lazy asses with licenses and only want to operate appliances.

> Radio Buff isn't going to want to give up enjoying radio when he/she is

If I can't pass the tests, I don't deserve a license, or renewel. I don't get to operate if I can't qualify. It's that simple. You people think that if someone can't pass a test, they should get the license anyway.
It's a government handout just like how you get your welfare checks and food stamps in the mail at your project housing. Your Democrat party outcome based thinking is what is distroying Amateur radio and America.
Everyone is equal and if you want to excel and improve yourself there is something wrong with you because your not supposed to want to do that.

Quality or quantity? You people that want things easy always say requiring more qualified licensees will kill the service. You're against quality because it require you have to work a little. Well, If you ever need radio help in an emergency to save lives & property, and the ham operator you talk to on the other end is an incompetant retard, I'll bet you'd wished for quality then.

Yah, we can't require quality or skill for a license. I know you're right.
We gotta be like CB'ers.

Code isn't a requirement, you can always talk on CB, FRS, and cell phones all you want.

No, it's not pointless. It insures licenses will improve and will be valuable to the service. I know you would hate that because in another month you would either have to upgrade or loose your ticket.

Doesn't anyone else here want to save ham radio? I'm getting tired of arguing with the lazy asses. I hope some of you cared and want to help me save ham radio enough that you emailed this to President Bush, your Senators and Congressmen to press the FCC does the right thing for us:

No more automatic renewals. Individuals must retest and pass all elements required for their license class.

The passing score for written exams needs to be raised to 85%.

Code elements should be 13 wpm for General, and 20 wpm for Extra.

Make the no-code license one year non-renewable.

73, Thanks for your support.

Markie,

I'm not throwing you off the bands. You're throwing yourself off. You have to pass a test for the privileges. If you can't pass the test like Techs used to have to pass, you get no privileges to operate and have to go back to CB with everyone else that can't pass a test and acts retarded.
You earn privileges, licenses aren't totally free handouts from the FCC yet, as much as you people wish they were. No one is throwing you off the bands. You being a lazy ass that can't spell and don't want to learn gets you thrown off the bands. The no-code license was a bad idea to begin with anyway. You couldn't have got licensed under the old system. You and Sal M. Onella would still be talking yourselves on CB and pissing off truck drivers.

I already earned those prevlidges you want to propose that they be revoked for no valid reason

fortunately the FCC will NEVER go for it perhaps it was (I don't agree it was but I will grant it might be) but it is 20 years too late for that discussion

Acualy I could have gotten one by simply accepting the offer of those testing to lie and say that I passed the same day

I certainly could gotten a license I was merely too honest

I still use CB when it serves my needs as I also use mMURS and FRS when they suit

but you clearly hate what the ARS is and you would enact a sytem that would kill they ARS as it is if you that makes you one real sicko

nope

I do hate the ioidea of yet again taking prevdeges away form operators that Have earned them I think een the ARRL and FCC learned that lesson year ago

you don't

then do your self a kindness and stop you are not helping the ARS except for contuiing to prod the No Coders into pushing the FCC to stop

Indeed I did email your thought to a freind on the white house staff

I reported on the laughter that rsulted not bad but not likely since it will rsult in prevledges being taken away from those that EARNED them

if you like suicide for the service and will never be enacted by the FCC they have ejuected anything that takes prevedlges awayfrom people and the final

throwing half of the ops currently licensed would insure the loos of most if not all of our spectrum

Everyone saw me put a good-faith offer on the table, one even based on Lloyd's implicit suggestion. Lloyd swatted it away, even adding an insulting, bad-faith, counter "offer." Which makes me wonder what Lloyd really wants (or if he really wants anything, except maybe to argue).

And whether Lloyd wants to accept it or not, I will consider the offer still good for anyone else who wants to accept it in good faith.

nope

I don't think is has an attorney one the best I think he had is talking in his normal half truths to one and then when his "evidence" showed up the guy told him to hit the hit but steve had already shot off his keybaoord

I would feel sorry for him were not such a jerk Actually, that is another "Lloyd" who does not speak for me (I know his identity, BTW). As a matter of fact, I just got back on the net after some DSL modem problems and found the other Lloyd's response.

Bottom line: Your proposal looks quite acceptable to me. I am of course only one of the Lloyds, but I don't have any problems with a moderated group, because it will be a new group. People will be able to choose where they want to post, and moderation will not be forced on anyone.

Because the other Lloyd has attempted to reproduce all of the headers in my messages, I will begin signing my messages with PGP. Before the other Lloyd has a chance to spoof a bogus public key, I have attached the public key which matches the private key I will be using to sign future messages as Lloyd.

Since you have PGP, you should have no difficutly verifying any signed messages I post in the future. The spoofing Lloyd will, on the other hand, not be able to produce a validly signed message.

Cheers,
Lloyd the 1st

Anything I choose can be forged unless I sign the message cryptographically, especially since the forger is located at my own NSP. The PGP signature is unique and will have to serve as a unique identifier. I will change my nym to "Lloyd 1", and will continue to sign my messages with the key posted

WATER..... It has been scientifically proven that if we drink 1 litre of water each day, at the end of the year we would have absorbed more than 1 kilo of Escherichia coli bacteria found in faeces, in other words, we are consuming 1 kilo of Doo Doo.

However, we do not run that risk when drinking wine (or rum, whiskey, beer or other liquors) because alcohol has to go through a distillation process of boiling, filtering and fermenting.

WATER = Doo Doo

WINE = HEALTH

Free yourself of Doo Doo, drink WINE!!!

It is better to drink wine and talk Doo Doo than to drink water and be full of shit.

There is no need to thank me for this valuable information, I am doing it as a public service.

Have a nice day..

That's not passing, that's cheating. If you're old enough to go to school you're old enough to know the difference.

If he hated it he wouldn't care what it's become. He cares because he DOESN'T hate it.

There were plenty of hams when 13 wpm was the entry level. A 5 wpm code test and a real written test wouldn't kill it, it would just separate those who are willing to do what it takes to be hams from those who just want the license without the work.

Then dropping CW because it's old and no longer used is illogical. Not

I think that's one of the problems here. CW isn't just an operating mode - it's a language, and the test already includes one language, so testing for knowledge of a language isn't anything new.

There's NEVER been a test of CW operating mode, technique or ability - just proficiency with the language of International Morse. Since one must demonstrate proficiency with another language (English) to obtain a license, it's a matter of degree, not a matter of kind.

He's right, though. Anyone who ever heard K2SUC out of Nutley, NJ, would agree. The repeater wars of the 60s and 70s. The 146.715 repeater on Long Island in the early 70s.

We've had our share of pre-VEC idiots. But it was never as bad as even some of the things you hear on 75 these days. I rarely plug a the test do no t include another lange or even english as a lang

but it is load of bullto say Morse is a language

no such requirement exists indeed if you can read then the question and answers are suposed to read to you and your aswers taken down

no requirement to understand english exists in order to be licensed maybe nut the current entry rates sugest otherwise and He does not propose 5wpm and writeen test he prososes 13 wpm and a total lack of an effective entry class and elimiating half the current licees and likely a lot more than that and any "paln" that involves dumping 300,000 hams right of the bat is pretty going to finish off the ARS

That you have an opinion doesn't make the opinion something that should be government policy. Who do you think you are, Bush? (Oh, forget that - his opinion isn't worth as much as yours.)

>but in any case the FCC will never take my prevledges thay have made Right - the government NEVER changes anything. Are you really that naive?

> accordingly you need to learn to deal with what is instaned

I have nothing to deal with - I'm licensed, and could keep my license if they made 20 wpm, or digital mode testing, a yearly requirement.
The biggest problem would be freeing up a day to get to wherever the test was being given.

>> >Acualy I could have gotten one

No, you could have stolen a license - you couldn't have been licensed.

That's about what it's come to these days, isn't it? We can't hurt people's feelings by telling them that they're just not qualified to do what they want to do. The kid fails all his tests and never turns in homework? Hey, he's still a high school graduate. Let his boss suffer.

For many years, my CCNY degree was worthless, because anyone could get
one. Whether they could pass the tests, or not even sign their name, mad no difference. That little escapade has changed. Maybe some day a ham ticket will mean something again too. Right now all it means is that you took the time to apply for it.

Correlation isn't cause. Who needs ham radio with cell phones and the internet? (I spent a lot of my ham effort maintaining an HT so that I had communications when I was out and about. A cell phone's so much easier.)

Seems to me we had a pretty good ARS when we only has 100,000 hams. If dumping 300,000 means losing half, it means having 3 times the number we used to have. How is tripling "finishing off"?

Languageless? You MUST demonstrate proficiency in at least ONE language to get a license, even today. A code test is demonstrating proficiency in two languages - not a major step.

becuase it would be halfing not triplling and to assume it is only halfing is generous many of the current generald and extra would be weed out withon 10 years if ham radio looks like it it is dying we will loose oour bands to anyone that wants em indded a likely result would losing many of ou r hf bands bands to literaly an extpanded CB service our vhf and up would be savaged

and we would be powerless to resist

my opinion yes but also a fact Morse code is no more a language than Crillic is it is simply an alphabet

you can exchange a limited amount of info using the stand codes but you can say "do you walk or run by the sea" in morse to any one that does not speak or read english first you are simply spreading ignorance al

> >no such requirement exists indeed if you can read then the question and

yes indeed although it easier if you do understand english not required not suree if you can take the test in spanish (or other ;lang)right off but if not now soon I expect it will be possible

> You MUST demonstrate proficiency in at least ONE > language to get a license, even today.

nope no such requirement exists not for techs not generals and not extras either

indeed you point out the way you can get a license without demtating skill with english if you simply memroize all the questions and answers their remains no requirement that you understand the content, that task is easier if you know english but not a requirement

where is this requirement for lang skill in part 97?

> A code test is demonstrating > proficiency in two languages - not a major step.

expect you are never required to demostrate profiicentcy in any language at all and if you were 2 languages would twice one and Code is NOT a langauage

just an alphabet

Indeeded the ignorance of Hams that spread such tales have been one of the tools the No Code movement has been using against you with all due respect to you as a fellow ham I strongly disagree with your position. I got my ticket the so called "right" way. I've held an advanced (WA4) class since I had to drive to the nearest office for for the written and cw.

Remember when the dam questions weren't even allowed to be published?
Remember those stupid ass ARRL study manuals?Al,how was that better?
Remember when the Dick Bash system came along? As I remember new hams would mail Dick the questions they remembered and a crude study manual slowly developed into a pretty accurate (for the time) guide.
Then guys started passing using the system. The "real" hams figured the guys who used the Dick Bash system weren't real hams "like them". Because they passed the "right" way and the new guys were, well, you know, what you say about the techs now.

No Al, CW is a mode not a language. Are you seriously this ignorant?
Just about any language on the planet can use the mode CW which makes it not a language.

You people that keep trying to make CW something it's not amaze me.
It's not a god, it's just a old mode.

I think you have to refer to people like Al as "Code Nazis" as they want to force it on everyone, they try to make it into something it is not, they think code is a cure for what ails the amateur service, and the only way to salvation is through the code. Anyone who is not on the code bandwagon is unfit for the amateur service and needs to be eliminated.

"All hail the code!" - NOT!

No more than ASL is "just an alphabet". (BTW, those who actually study the subject consider both Morse and ASL to be languages.)

Neither can you communicate with someone in ASL if they don't language.

The reason the FCC is dropping the code requirement has absolutely nothing to do with any "movement" or any lame argument like "you don't

Any language can be signed - but ASL is a recognized (by the experts) language. Which nullifies that argument.

CW is not a language, it is a mode. I think what is being confused here is Morse code, and in particular much of the Morse shorthand used in the CW mode (and, for that matter, in much of phone mode as well). Those ARE a language of sorts.

No, I really don't care that my license really means nothing these frequencies, and those modes, that I want to use, and talk to those people I want to talk to. Whether new hams need CW or not.

That has nothing to do with frequency allocation. Learn how the ITU

We ARE pretty powerless to resist now - but whether we keep a CW

all that is required is getting the right answers down on the answer sheet

how the test taker manages that (other than cheating) is up the take of the test one of the options understanding the lang of the question is merely one or the options the best one for the ARS but for example MY wife did not understand some the question on her tech test using the fact I know something of how the test is asembled and graded she was able to fill correctly some of the ansers by looking for a patern in the in answers of the questions she could understand without this test taking skill (avarient of skill taught in some corners for passing other tests) she would not be a ham today

and yet she was able to help set up at FD this year and make some contact and has been able to devolpe soe of the skill needd in the ARS, enough to be complmented on her skill duiring reccent local emergency here in the area. i was busy geting theour aux power back online and adjusted to the loads I wanted carried and she used the radio (and helped by reading a a few reading fromt he station back to me as I worked on stablizing our household systems

My wife does not understand a great deal of the content of the messages she relayed, such understanding was not required in order to be of assitance

On her own she has slowly been feling her way into the preveldges offered by her license, amsuingly to those that know me she is developing some talnet for Morse Code and and has been making a qso's in that mode but due being still clumsy and a more than bit of test anxiety has been unable to pass a test that and the fact the tone the arrl uses gives her a headache and the ARRL will not alow another tone to used without the report of an audiologist (at a cost of about 2k) means she will wait tille the FCC acts to get an HF license like I am waiting

Can't you spell any better than that?

So, Al. Can you tell us how many receivers or transmitters have you built from scratch? Not from a kit, or someone else's design, but from scratch? Drew a block diagram that was converted to a real schematic one block at a time where you did all the math, laid out the chassis, cut and drilled all the holes and built the equipment all by yourself?

What is the biggest transmitter you've ever built or used? I'm a disabled now, but I worked in broadcast, and built telemetry equipment that is in use all over the world, and in orbit. Tell us, what can you do other than whine? Have you ever built a commercial TV station from scratch? Have you ever maintained a 5 MW EIRP UHF plant with a 1700 foot+ tower? Had the fun of finding parts for a transmitter that haven't been made for 15 years while managing to stay on the air?

I found CW boring years ago, and have some hearing problems so I said to hell with Morse code and got involved in the equipment design end of things. It was more fun for me to develop a design and built it, get it aligned and working, then move on to the next design.

This whole thing was started by what's called a troll. It was forged, not from the person it purports to be from. Many of the "responses" are also forged, and from the same person or his cohorts.

It exists to piss people off, get them riled up, and so the forgers can sit back and laugh at what they have gotten those in the newsgroups, who they consider to be idiots, to post as responses.

Better? I don't know. Who said it was?

But how many hams today could even understand a schematic, let alone build a W2EWL rig? But how many SSB (or DSB) transmitters were homebrew? Hams don't even build repeater controllers any longer - everything is appliance. What's ham radio supposed to be (from the government viewpoint) if not a training ground? For people who know how to operate. Not for CBers on ham bands.

People are afraid of losing things if we have too few hams? Where will the FCC's justification go (the "ham radio provides us with a pool of experienced operators" thing) if ham radio is just CB on different frequencies?

3 receivers, about a dozen transmitters. Oh, yes, and the automation system of the Hong Kong Space Museum planetarium, the old Amtrak ticket printer, some software that's in use in over 50,000 installations around the world ...

But I'm not the typical ham, I've been a design engineer for a long time.

>What is the biggest transmitter you've ever built or used? I'm a >disabled now, but I worked in broadcast

Never built anything over a kilowatt, but engineered some pretty hefty ones. (Ch. 40 in Waterbury CT, WWRL, WHN, a few others.)

(You remind me of an IBM HR department of old. They always wanted to know the largest program the applicant ever wrote. Someone legitimately told them, back when software was a few k, that he'd written a 3 meg program. It was a translation program with a 3 meg dictionary. You're playing "mine is bigger than yours.")

>Tell us, what can you do other than whine? Have you ever built a commercial TV station from >scratch?

All by myself, no. Ever build a planetarium automation system all by yourself from scratch (including inventing some of the technology - which is still, after 30 years, state of the art)? But I'm not going to get into a pissing contest with you. If you were mentally as old as you claim your body to be you wouldn't have started one.

Since I totally depend on 2 4 channel BTE aids, I can't receive CW that easily any more, but that's not a good reason for the FCC to drop the requirement. It's not even a bad reason. But when anyone can guess well enough to pass the "technical" part of the exam, the license isn't worth much.

He did grow up neurotic, because of his home life. His mommy sleeping until 4 P.M, climbing all over the poor bastards she brought home after barhopping, trying to break down the bathroom door when she heard Markie and his father taking a bath together when he was sixteen, the usual morgan perversions carried down for generations. First of all, congratulations on making more typos per line inch than you have in a long time...Back to the Old Morkie, I see.

Secondly, there's no "wanna be warrior" in CAP. CAP is, by law, a non-combatant organization.

As for being " un proffesional" and without "disipline", there are members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff who have a differing opinion, Morkie.

I'd take thier opinion on the matter a looooooooooooooooooooooong time before yours, fatboy.

Your reputation was established long before I ever even knew RRAP existed.

Here's the truth:

Mark C. Morgan is a known sexual deviate.

Mark C. Morgan is an admitted pathological liar.

Mark C. Morgan has a trail of open investigations in several locale for inappropriate behaviour.

Mark C. Morgan never completed a college education at one, let alone three institutions.

Mark C. Morgan never completed a successful tour of duty in the Armed Forces.

Mark. C. Morgan was never a commissioned officer in the Armed Forces.

Mark C. Morgan does not own a buisness.

That's seven, Morkie...I could be up all night doing this and never repeat the same claim!

you have been threatening you fool lawsuit for months

you have just one problem, you lack a case to bring against me

I know that much

the worst you can accuse me of is taking you at YOUR own word and given your insistance you NEVER EVER LIE that put a pretty good hole in your case given your history of stalking me and other I am not woried another problem you have is that you can't frighten me with something I am not afraid of your "suit" if filled will cost me 750 dollars. the same money will allow me to take a shot at suing you at the same time. worst that happens is both suts are dismissed indeed thay is the most likely result so BRING IT ON

Sure I would.

CAP does not have any dominion over this NG, Mork.

I don't presume to address myself in that role.

You are welcomed to try to find some REAL argument vis-a-vis my CAP membership, but so far all you've done is make a fool out of yourself

Why? You've not disproved it and there are third parties who say otherwise.

> your claim my wife is male is libel

Why?

You claim you sleep with men and routinely put male genitalia in your mouth and rectum. So until a picture of you standing next to your alleged wife with a current "USA Today" and a sign claiming that "she" is indeed your "wife", the assertion stands as factual.

> your cliam Tood is gay is libel

Who's "Tood"...?!?!

YOU have claimed to taking sex by force, Mork.

THAT is rape.

Are you now recanting your claims?

Wisman? Who's that?

And if you didn't provide so much material to work with, no one would have anything to be "...ranting on and on aout..."

You ARE your own worst enemy.

No, it's not.

Unless you can show me how your extract "Maj" from "Steven"...?!?!

I can show YOU how I get "Mork" from Mark.

I can also drawn the parallels from the character "Mork" on the television show and you, if you'd care.

You mean figure out that YOU are an idiot who STILL can't take a hint that YOU are mispelling the former Reichsminister for Proganda's name...?!?!

I GOT that part, Mork.

You do on occassion,but "cuting" is your favorite hobby...

As is back-editing to cover your faux pas'...as many as they are.

No need to thank me for telling the truth, Mork...You'd be having to do that after every sentence whether you liked it or not.

Now...How about an apology for insisting that I said something I DIDN'T say, Mork, since you've admitted here to what I really DID say!

I agree with all negative comments regarding RadioMart, but I think most people in the hobby already know about him and have him filtered out of their eBay searches. He caters to the newbies.

However, I disagree that eBay is a bad place to buy gear. It is definitely the largest collection of radio and related equipment available, and with careful buying it is possible to avoid being taken. I have had a few attempts to rip me off, but Paypal is your best friend when it comes to getting your money back. EBay knows it can't afford to alienate buyers with a bad reputation and so it protects sellers pretty well. And the nice thing about eBay is that if a particular seller seems shady or uncooperative, just walk away. Another one just like it will always come up.

There is no absolute way to avoid being taken short of trying to buy elsewhere.

Ebay owns Paypal. They watch each other's backs.

After a sale, when the purchased item arrives and the buyer can see it was misrepresented, Ebay always supports the seller; that's where their money comes from.

Although eBay is convenient, the company employs dummys, and is impossible to deal with when there is a problem.

Did that save even one life? If the Titanic's CW operator had not bullied the California's CW operator off the air, the California might have saved the day. But after such shabby treatment from the Titanic's arrogant CW operator, the California's CW operator shut down and turned in.

We aren't talking about failure to receive a CW SOS. Those ships that responded did so after receiving word of the sinking by radio. They saved many lives from the lifeboats which would otherwise have been lost to the cold.

If CW had not existed at the time, how would things have turned out differently? If the present GPS-based system had existed at the time, how would things have turned out?
Which system is presently inferior and virtually obsolete?

C'mon Cecil, you've been licensed as long as I have. I Know you Know CW. Does that mean we're virtually obsolete?

RE Titanic:

The same result would have happened. The ship hit an iceberg in poor visibility. I don't think icebergs carry GPS transponders these days.

Now, the Titanic's GPS; does it have transponder capability? The older GPS units do not. Anyway, after the crew slipped by the iceberg that ripped it open, the radio op gets on the air and reports "SOS" or equivalent. The nearest ships respond. Under conditions similar to 1914{?} the Titanic still sinks. Many people still die. But, now we know to 20 feet exactly where the ship was when it sank.

GPS won't make a difference. Neither will CW today.

I still enjoy CW.

LOL!

I laugh when you lazy asses whine CW is keeping you from modernizing.

The code requirement isn't stopping anyone from modernizing. Hams don't want to modernize and won't modernize unless they're forced to modernize. That's what's stopping the modernization.

How does having a CW requirement prevent you from hooking a computer to a rig? It don't. You don't want to modernize because you're stupid or lazy. Just like you don't want to learn CW because you're stupid or lazy.

EBay/Paypal do not always support the seller. Although I've had relatively few problems, by asking good questions of the seller and being willing to walk away when things don't seem kosher, in the 4 or 5 times that I've had to file a dispute because something was misrepresented, Paypal has sided with me (the buyer) and I've always gotten my money back. It sometimes takes a little longer than I would like, but if you're a reasonable buyer and can provide the facts about why an item was misrepresented, you won't have a problem getting things resolved.

Also, eBay/Paypal don't "side" more with either buyers or sellers. They side with the party that is right, in their judgement, after looking at the facts. They know that they can't afford to alienate buyers with a reputation as a place where you are easily ripped off. Confidence in the buying experience is what made eBay what it is today, and they are not stupid enough to give that up.

So if you have had bad experiences, perhaps it is because you have filed complaints that were not reasonable, or maybe you didn't ask all the right questions before you made a purchase. Possible?

No offense, but only an idiot wouldn't have known that they would "spin up" people on these news groups, or any others for that matter. Your idea is possible, but I'd have to say not probable.

If what you say _is_ true, maybe he'll 'fess up. That would be interesting.

I'm going through a dispute now where a guy who was finally kicked off ebay (phil9923)
It took me over a month to get a refund from him for a radio he never delivered. Now, another month later, Paypal sends me an email stating that he may have used a stolen credit cars to pay me my refund and they want ME to give it back. EXCUSE ME! That is and always was MY money. In the meantime, my Paypal account is frozen. Thanks, Mr. Love, like that's your real name...

Naw, CW makes it too easy to communicate. CW is for lazy people. Real hams want to struggle to copy signals through noise and QRM. That's why they hate CW... it's no challenge!

None of your assumptions are correct.

The device was a "New" Video Grabber, complete with the power supply. It was one of 25 identical units being auctioned.

The unit arrived with a Radio Shack universal 300 mA wallwart (obviously NOT part of the "new" unit). The Video unit requires 3 Amps, as imprinted on the equipment.

The eBay resolution was that the seller would return what I bid for the unit, but I must pay to ship it back to the seller. That is NOT a reasonable resolution. The seller should, at least, have paid the return freight.

I also told them that, alternatively, the seller could simply ship me a correct power supply, which he did not want to do.

A correct resolution is that I should not be out anything for this misrepresented deal. The seller should have paid me for my original shipping cost and for reshipping it back. Anything less, permits sellers to pull shady deals and get away with it, at eBay's profit.

By the way.... Top Posting is the mark of, at least, a non-observant newsgroup newby.

The person would not die on my watch, as long as I could get a signal out and someone on the other end could copy it. I'd probably have to practice a bit to get back up over 50wpm, but I can do 25 or 30 all day long.

Yes, that's one of the downsides - you will generally be responsible for getting the item back to the seller at your own expense. However, I've always gotten my full payment refunded, including the original shipping costs TO me. Paying shipping for the return trip is simply the cost of doing business and part of the risk you assume. Just like in the physical world, if you buy something from the store that doesn't work and you want a refund, it's up to you to get in your car and drive to the store at your own expense. They don't come and pick it up, or pay for your gas as part of the refund.

I understand that some people have had bad experiences on eBay. My point is that I have bought a lot of radios through eBay (including one just last night) and have had few problems. EBay is the ONLY marketplace where such a large number and variety of radio-related equipment is available, but you have to follow a few simple rules.

1) Ask a lot of questions and be willing to walk away if the seller is unresponsive, vague, or seems shady in any way. There is never an item that you MUST have; another one just like it will come along.
2) Save all email correspondence between you and the seller regarding the item and it's condition.
3) Pay attention to the seller's feedback.
4) Use only Paypal, with a credit card, to pay for your purchases.
5) Be reasonable in your expectations.
6) If a problem does occur, present your dispute in a professional and reasonable way.

That brings to mind a question: Is there any way to stop paypal from insisting on using your linked bank account as its first choice?

The reason I ask, is I accidentally forgot to check "more payment options", and didn't notice until after paypal finalized the transaction. Paypal attempted to overdraw my account, and I got charged a $25 overdraft fee by my bank. The idiots at paypal were going to retry this 2 more times before quitting, and using my "backup" credit card. If I hadn't noticed, this transaction would have cost me $75 in overdraft fees. There was no way I could cancel the payment, and switch to a credit card.

I complained to paypal, because I thought they were supposed to check the balance on the account before they tried to draw funds, but they ignored me completely.

Don't give them an account number in the first place.

A few years ago I listened to a radio show called 'The Troubleshooter' done by a guy named Tom Martino, and he's still going today. One thing he always harped on, hard, was 'Never give anyone access to your bank account beyond the checks you write.' Not health clubs, insurance companies, utilities, car payments, rent, paypals, not anyone. My first wife allowed the insurance company to automatically deduct our /monthly/premium from our checking account and two days after she'd set that up they took six months' worth and we were bouncing checks. We had to close that account and I don't do business with that insurance company any more. I'm also no longer married to her but that wasn't precipitated by the bank fiasco.

Hardly a month goes by without hearing about something similar. It might be difficult to not give Paypal your account info, especially if you sell on eBay, but I'll never do it. I've considered setting up a special account just for Paypal and keeping the balance very low but the monthly low balance service charges and that I'll get dinged just like Chuck for overdrafts just doesn't make it worth it.

Until banks are more responsive to consumers and allow limits on such transactions (and I'm not holding my breath ;-) I don't engage in such transactions.

Nonsense. Having to do something promotes laziness? Then exercise promotes sloth and dieting promotes obesity. By your "logic", that is.

Since The radio operator of the Titanic knew exactly where they were,
GPS would have made absolutely no difference. If radio hadn't existed, everyone aboard would have died.

If I dare WHAT, fatboy?

Since you're big on calling others cowards and "daring" them to do things, here's a few for you...Let's see how "brave" YOU are, fatboy:

(1) Name the colleges you allegedly graduated from, inlcluding grad dates and the disciplne for which the diploma was awarded.

(2) What is the name of your business and how is it listed in the phonebook?

(3) Place a picture of you and "Mrs" Morkie on-line with a

I was asked a number of times why I didn't have a degree in EE. When I found a problem, or saw something that needed improved I didn't just run crying to the MEs. I researched the problem and wrote up a detailed report. I found the way to correct the problem, found a source for any part we didn't already stock, and submitted it directly to the engineer responsible for that item. After a while they would just flip through my paperwork and submit it to be typed up on the proper forms, then sign it off. I had planned to go to college and get my degree, but my time in the Army threw those plans out the window.

Not really, but a lot of guys have never done anything more than solder a microphone plug to a cable, and then use those crappy solderless coax connectors. Actually, I'm always happy to meet a ham with some real electronics skills. I meet a lot of retired hams here near Ocala, and very few of them know any electronics. I hear the same I could through together a CW rig from scratch in an emergency, then they admit they don't even have an old ARRL handbook to look up a schematic, or any parts. One told me he would use parts from his TV set, that the horizontal output tube and a few other parts would put him on the air.
He didn't even know that his six month old TV only had one tube, and I've never seen a transmitter built from a CRT and salvaged, unmarked SMD parts.

Biggest isn't the goal, but a long term large project is always interesting. I always liked a challenge, and left the easy jobs for everyone else.

I never built anything like that, but I did repair some electronics for the manager of the planetarium at the Orlando Science Center years ago. I have worked on numerous industrial control systems, as well.
Sounds like it was a bit of a challenge. Good for you. :) My next couple projects are an electric gate controller, and a motorized flag pole, both with custom controllers with 100 MHz Ethernet interfaces so i can run them from any computer on my home network. I have about 50' of used TV tower in storage. I'm going to weld angle iron up two legs and use a motorized trolley to raise and lower the flag. The gate openers are a pair of used 24" sat tv jacks with a custom controller, a web cam, and an emergency open button that sets off the security system as the gate opens.

What about the people locked out by CW requirements who wanted to design and test RF equipment? Not the "I don't do solder" types, but people with a real love of electronic design? I've always had a severe dropout in my hearing that made it impossible to listen to CW for more than a few minutes at a time. I would end up with headaches, some that lasted for days. I finally threw in the towel and went into other areas of electronics. I wanted to learn microwave communications. Along the way I worked in Broadcast and Two way radio servicing. My last job was building commercial microwave receivers at Microdyne. They were custom built from base models for the customers application, on whatever band or segment they needed, and with IF and video bandwidths from 10 KHz to 40 MHz. In a place like that you would have thought there would be a lot of hams, but I only found about a dozen still licensed, and not one who was still active.

I'm talking about the emergency GPS-based system now in operation. Other ships are automatically notified of emergencies and given headings for reaching the emergency location. If the Titanic and California had been so equipped, the California could probably have gotten there before the Titanic sank. The GPS-based emergency system doesn't go to sleep like the California's CW operator did. I believe the California also ignored a flare from the Titanic thinking it was just part of the maiden voyage celebration.

If radio had not existed, the next passing ship would have rescued any survivors. That's the way it was for centuries before the invention of radio. There were often survivors in lifeboats waiting to be picked up in the shipping lanes.
Well-equipped lifeboats could survive for weeks in calm
waters as did the ejected sailors of "Bounty" fame.

I agree that trimming is sometimes a good idea.

But as you have done, one can trim too much such that the "real" thread is lost. All you left was the afterthought.

Also, too often, particularly on s.e.d., I see people trimming to enhance their position. It's a judgment call whether and what, to trim.

I am not so sure about that. My first and only experience with Onstar - was not a very good impression. The "phone system" didn't dial out for crap - by the time you got it to accept the "right" number, you could be dead. Three people in the vehicle called out the number to the sytem a minimum of 5 times each before one of us finally got it to dial. I'm not sure how the other part (emergency locator and response) would have worked as it was never tried. Maybe it works ok in some areas and not others, like cell phones, I don't know - I'm not "that" familiar with it, but that was my experience, limited as it was. I know others seem to have good reports.

Code - has had it's place in history - be it with the Titanic however it helped - to maybe others stranded. We don't know about any (or many) "military" use(s) where it may have helped out, we don't always hear about those things. Is CODE the "saviour" of the world? NO. Each mode or language if you choose to call it that - has it's own heroic moment at some point. Even Smoke Signals (if truly used/existed) probably had SOME helpful value. In a sense, smoke signals STILL exist. They use them at the Vatican to signify certain events - more notibly the death of a Pope. Simply put - you use what you have available at the moment - be it smoke signals, sun light off a mirror, code, fax, voice, drums, whatever. Anything is better than nothing in time of need. Seriously, I don't understand the argument over

Code. Times change, things change. We could argue the use of the smoke at the Vatican when a PA system would do the same job.

With each advance in technology, something goes off the shelf and tossed aside or if kept on the shelf, gets serious dust collections due to little if any use. Electricity replaced candles and lanterns for the most part - though not completely. The Telephone didn't automatically discontinue all other forms of communication - ie, code. The fax and e-mail have not yet altogether replaced "mail" but some day it may. We as a whole can choose to keep something by "using" it or losing it by NOT using it. Things just don't disappear overnight. IF ya like code - USE IT. IF ya don't, then don't worry about it. "IF" you need it to get a license - 5 wpm is not that hard. You won't get it by osmosis. It takes some determination. Just like studying the book. Nothing in life is worth much if just handed to you. There are myriads of things we "must" learn in life which may never be used again - it goes with the territory of life and getting through it. I had to take a course in college once to jump through their hoops. Have I ever used it since? HELL NO. No plan to - either.

As to the Titanic operator being a smart ass as someone alluded to in here - maybe he was just losing his cool (very afraid) and trying desperately to get help and felt any other signals were just going to interfere. I don't know - just my own supposition. People do strange things in an emergency and staring death in the eye IS an emergency. Maybe he screwed up, maybe things could have went differently - we'll never know. FATE has a strange way of playing out in all our lives. We can argue all night long over the "would haves and could haves". Nothing will change that course of history. The fact remains, he at least got the word out and SOME people were saved. ALL could have been lost - were he killed prior to the sending of the message AND if no one else aboard knew how to operate the equipment. He was just a "player" in the scheme of things. Had they not hit the iceberg by whatever faulty(?) piloting or directions being given in the first place, the Radio Operator wouldn't even be the issue. We had an incident here when I was but a teen. A "firefighter" had a problem - losing his cool, he got on the radio and said "Clear the airwaves, we have a national emergency". Yes, they had a problem, not of "national" proportion, but he lost his cool and went overboard in what he did with the radio. People - even stone hard natured people - panic given the right scenario. FRIGHT exists in all of us - at some time. Panic is the response.

GPS, CODE, ONSTAR - NOTHING (except perhaps radar or sonar) would have told them the icebergs were there. Even if they knew they were in a section of water where there were "known" icebergs that they could have steered away from, - as we know - icebergs can and DO break off - so this one "could" have been such a case. It was a doomed mission just as any that the Astronauts have been killed on - even with all the so-called advanced technology and communications at their disposal. Any number of people could be pointed to or "what ifs" asked. The point is, the end is still the same. People died. In the latter case, NO amount of radio comms modes would have made a difference. Just like the spotting of the iceberg at the last minute - so too was the spotting of the problem in the heat shield and equipment - aboard the shuttle - too little - too late - with or without radio - regardless the mode.

Just my 2 cents.

It was before the Titanic hit the iceberg that the Titanic CW operator told the Californian CW operator to get off the air. He considered his normal Titanic CW message traffic to have priority over any CW traffic that the Californian might need to pass. Turns out the Californian's CW operator was the only person in the world who could have saved the life of the Titanic's CW operator.

Not practical, paypal cuts you off after you have made an accumulated $2000 in payments. The only way they will let you exceed that limit is if you tie a bank account to your paypal account.

Further, ebay encourages sellers not to sell to unconfirmed addresses.
The only way to confirm an address is to link a credit card, or confirmed paypal account to your ebay account.

I agree with him. That is why I opened this account just for paypal. I only keep $50 in the account, hence the problem.

That is exactly what I did. Credit unions charge no service fees, and have a $50 minimum for startup.

Cecil I will conseede the CW usage could have saved lives could still save lives

but that was never the question

the question of the thread is could you save a life with CW is the chance came
I am sure you could.

I could I certainly I could by very different means could I save lifes on HF if the need arouse certainly I could do so except I do not listen them nowsince Ican't use them as rotuiene matter which would save more life and property maintining CW testing to keep many of the current tech from aquiring HF experence or droing the test al though us sue of the bands and the abilty to learn in an evionment that assures there is some one out there to talk to someone

He trimmed exactly the right amount. He was only commenting on your comment about top posting.

Personally, I have found it better to allow others to do things the way they want to. They are going to anyway. So, I tend to avoid making comments about others grammar, spelling, and top/bottom/or sideways posting habits.

If the post offends me, I tend to ignore it.

The first thing to go out in a disaster is the phone system. The cell phone system is not immune to this problem.

A long time ago a guy I worked with told me that when he was in the Army he was assigned to the artillery. He could not qualify as a forward observer because he could only work 20 wpm and needed to be able to do 30 to qualify as a FO communicator.

The radio operation on the RMS Titanic was controlled by the Marconie Radio Company. As such the Titanic radio operator was discouraged from communicating with any station controlled by another company. This is called free enterprise. Also the radio was not under the command of Capt. Smith. This was changed after the sinking. They also mandated 24/7 monitoring of the emergency radio frequencies.

The Canadian Coast Guard and the United States Coast Guard expend a lot of time and money looking for and tracking these icebergs. After the Titanic went down the International Iceberg Patrol was created. It even functioned during the Second World War giving positions report to allied mariners.

It was a doomed mission just as any that the Ship born radio communications were controlled by communications companies completely separate from the ship. The radio operators were not under the command of the ship's captain. In the case of Titanic the Marconi Radio Company controlled the radio. Californian and Carpathia had different company control and there was a definite rivalry between the companies. The Titanic operator was fully justified in telling the Californian operator to close station. This was one of the direct causes of the formation of the international radio treaties we operate under now.

Banks often cash altered checks. Further, you are giving out your bank account number, which in turn can lead to other forms of hacking.

I use a credit card that is just for internet use with a bank account not connected to my main back.

Also, pay for small items with cash, especially in restaurants. The less exposure of your credit card, the better.

It comes down to weighing practicality versus prudence. I've closed old and opened new paypal accounts when I get too close to the limit, even on the same credit card, and that limit was $10k the last time I opened a new one.

> Further, ebay encourages sellers not to sell to unconfirmed addresses.

I've never had a seller bring up the 'verified' issue even when they say they'll only ship to a verified address, maybe because I contact the
'must be verified' sellers personally in addition to the automatic post-auction contact. Like paypal, they're mostly interested in the money and will bend their rules a bit if it looks legit.

> ...I opened this account just for paypal. I > only keep $50 in the account, hence the problem.

I'm sorry it hasn't worked out better for you and I hope it gets better, but my experience makes me cynical and it's not that much more trouble doing what I do now. The again, I don't sell often and I don't take paypal payments when I do. That may have to change, and I'll have to do the special account business, and watch it like a hawk on bunnies.

No local credit union available for me.

It's totaly untrue. The Californian's radio operator ignored the Titanic's distress signals because the Titanic was a Marconi ship and the Californian was a Telefunken ship. The operators were not allowed to communicate with the competing company's operators under any circumstances under penalty of being put off the ship at first landing, with no hope of getting home or being hired by the other company.

I recently blogged about it:

Or when a couple ops with amplifiers move in a little too close to your

My experience exactly. I was perfectly happy just using a CC with paypal, but then I ran out of dough, and had to link a bank account.

And I am happy with that arrangement, but I only want to use a CC for my payments, and they insist on making my linked account be my primary source, with the CC my secondary... the cause of my overdraft problem.

The men put off the Bounty did not survive with ease but only through very hard work and the superb seamanship and leadership of Captain Bligh. Although he was an absolute ass while in command of the Bounty, but his performance was superb during that time.

And life boats floating in the shipping lanes could capsize in rough weather or drift out of the shipping lanes. We will never know how many people died at sea in such boats after surviving the loss of the ship.

The various technological improvements, including radio, have been important in improving the survival odds.

LOL! It started a long, long time ago.

When gasoline was 17 Cents a gallon, hams were complainining about how hard it was to get to the FCC office and wanted a mail-order license.
The conditional was born.

You are a perfect example of the problem
Too many people in this country more loyal to Israel than the US.

Get your FAT ASS there and fight for Israel if you love Israel.

Before Israel, we had no enemies in the middle east.
Every country the jews enter, they end up getting their asses kicked out.

I've made the same mistake once or twice myself, Chuck. It doesn't matter a whole lot to me, since I pay off the credit card in full anyway, but I do like to have that last bit of protection in case something goes really wrong (which hasn't happened yet, but still....) and I also like to have the one-month float.

I don't think there is a way to make the credit card the default payment option; it's one of those annoyances in an otherwise good service. It's curious why they didn't try the backup credit card right away. That's good to know.

Interesting idea, though - a CRT as a final with an inherent monitor.
I wonder how much RF output you can drive a CRT to. And, if you made it AM, would that be "focused" modulation? Or, if you were listening to the flyback, "high sing modulation"?

That was the whole idea behind the Tech ticket - minimal CW that anyone could get to in a few weeks and enough written exam to prove that you knew electronics. Anyone who can design or test RF equipment should be able to draw a few schematics.

There's the problem. "breaking down" CW is like listening to the letters someone is speaking. You don't break it down, you listen to what's being said.

Oh, you mean he didn't hear the automatic annunciator they had in use in those days? Mechanical and clunky, but it worked.

The only thing the GPS-based system does is give you an exact location
- it doesn't notify anyone of anything. Plain old radio does that, the same as it did back then.

>If radio had not existed, the next passing ship would have >rescued any survivors. That's the way it was for centuries

The way it usually was in the centuries before radio (just ask the crew of the Nuestra Senora de Atocha) was that when the ship sank the people on her died. (The Atocha's crew were all hardened sailors, yet only 3 crew members - out of 265 people aboard - clung to the wreckage long enough to be rescued.)

> There were often survivors
>in lifeboats waiting to be picked up in the shipping lanes.
>Well-equipped lifeboats could survive for weeks in calm
>waters as did the ejected sailors of "Bounty" fame.

1) There weren't enough lifeboats in the Titanic.
2) They weren't "equipped".
3) The crew of the bounty were sailors used to pulling oars for hours at a time. The passengers of the Titanic - those who were allowed to get to the lifeboats - were pampered women and children, not used to,
or able to, row a heavy wooden lifeboat anywhere.
4) People who are wet and in their night clothes - most of those who made it to the lifeboats - don't survive very long in sub-Arctic climes.

But it's nice to reminisce about what happened, even if it never did.

That, of course puzzles me too. I have had it make the right choice on other occasions when the amount was several times the amount in this account. This time, the account was about $7 short of the needed amount. It is an otherwise static account, so its balance shouldn't ever drop on its own... they screwed up, and I got to pay.

The ones who sleep in their cars are the dealers.
95% of them are CLASS 1 PIGS.

You are proud to be a US Citizen.

Canadans, Cubans, Mexicans, Brazilians, Argentinians, Chileans, etc., are also Americans. The name has been high-jacked.

RE,

The Mexicans just may refer to themselves as : Norte Amercanos
-or- Americanos del Norte
http://pt.wikipedia.org/wiki/Estados_Unidos_da_Am%C3%A9rica

The Cubans might call themselves : Americanos de Cuba.

Seriously NO Canadian would call themselves an : American [.]
- - - Even the French Canadians would say : Je Suis Un Canadien !

And the Argentinians, Chileans would most likely call themselves :
Sur Americanos -or- Americanos del Sur -or- Americanos Latinos

The Brazilians being slightly different would say : Americanos Sul

Only an American (USA) would Boldly Say :
I Am An American ! - and I Am Proud of It !
and so say i ~ RHF

why did the Longbow cease to be the main stay of the battle feild?

after the crossbow that replaced was an inferior weapon

and the crossboww superior to the muskets and rifles that replaced

indeed the english longbowmen was more effective on the battlefeild
than any military system the follow till after WW2 indeed a gruop Bowmen out of other ammo but happening to have thier bow with in the retreat toward Dunkirk put a german unit to flight (mostly through the shock factor and the quieness of the bow)

why did the longbow lose control of the battlefiled

simple it took a lifetime of traning and practice to maintain that effectness a crowbowmen could be trained in months

a riflemen in weeks

finaly to radio

why did CW lose out to mode that are effective

acodring to even it booster is takes weeks to train a cw ops and it
take practice for most to keep up their skill

voivce why these day even the porblem for voice op in geting through signal problem is practiced by cell phones users in many locals on a daily basis

CW was too expensive in human and finacail terms to surviv in the comercail world

it is too expensive in huan terms to hold sway with more than half of the ARS ops now (look at the numers) andyet it boosters inist like the King of englad did at one point in trying to ban the playing of golf to insist on it continued infliction on the ARS

yet it is likely as the longbow does survive being superceeded by the crossbow musket and M16 that it will survive

but could drop the crap about it being the end of the ars to change in

The "quieness" of the bow?

That's not in any archery manual I know of.

> why did the longbow lose control of the battlefiled

The longbow never lost control of the "battlefiled"...It was never in control.

CW hasn't lost out to anything so far, Mork.

OK. So it takes practice to use correctly.

I see where you're going with this, and it only substantiates the claim that youa re encouraging laziness.

> voivce why these day even the porblem for voice op in geting through

"Voivce" is not the problem in "geting through", Mork.

Access to the celltower (read that "repeater") is.

It doesn't matter WHAT mode you're using if you're dependant on inadequate coverage of the infrastructure to relay it.

> CW was too expensive in human and finacail terms to surviv in the

"finacail" terms?

"comercail"...

What's NOT too expensive is spell checking software.

Mork, you probably had a point to make, and knowing your one-track mind as well as I do, I can only assume that it is "anti-anything-I-can't-do". However your incessant refusal to use a spellchecker and / or fix your grammatical errors meant we were subjected to yet another grandiose abuse of the English language for your own gratification on opening yet another thread.

No...YOU are the one dancing the Red Hatted Monkey jig, fatboy.

The laugh's been on you for 8 months, and the only one too stupid to see you fell prey to your own tactics is YOU!

No, I have NOT been asking you this for 8 years...I've been asking you for three weeks...Since you made this absolutely LUDICROUS claim!

And Mork...I do NOT need to know where you went to school to "stalk" you.

I know EXACTLY where you live, courtesy of YOU and public records!

But you once again reinforce my assertion that you've NEVER attended (as a student, at least..) any college.

"efforts"...?!?!

"efforts" suggests that you did something that actually required, well, EFFORT! We all know that was wasted bandwidth!

The PROBLEM, Morkie, is that the guys sending the Morse are doing it in ENGLISH, and you're trying to "hear" it in Morkiese. The two don't exchange well.

Well at least your estate will get to keep your life savings. If you get sick late in the year, and the healthcare facility/hospital shut down for the rest of the year because it ran out of government money (a typical scenario in Canada), there will be no one to give you any care and you'll just die. But hey, your life savings will still be intact!
Is socialized health care great or what?

Be sure to thank you local Israeli Flag waving heebie hook-nose when you are soon paying $8 per gallon (...or more?) for gas at the pump in a few weeks time.

All of this just because some jews in Israel got a fly-up-their-butt to go and attack on 2 fronts and drive up gasoline prices to give a HUGE PAYOFF to Big Oil Bush and Cheney for all that AIPAC money.

Hope that you morons like paying $300.00 to go and fill up the tank of that Ford or Chevy SUV or pickup truck.

(Really should make the niggers think it's easier to strong-arm a gas station and get away with it instead of a bank eh? Gas station attendants today have more cash in their pockets that is behind the counter than the local bank! This should precipitate a nigger hold-up crime wave soon too eh?)

why did the Longbow cease to be the main stay of the battle feild?

after the crossbow that replaced was an inferior weapon

and the crossboww superior to the muskets and rifles that replaced

indeed the english longbowmen was more effective on the battlefeild
than any military system the follow till after WW2 indeed a gruop Bowmen out of other ammo but happening to have thier bow with in the retreat toward Dunkirk put a german unit to flight (mostly through the shock factor and the quieness of the bow)

why did the longbow lose control of the battlefiled

simple it took a lifetime of traning and practice to maintain that effectness a crowbowmen could be trained in months

a riflemen in weeks

finaly to radio

why did CW lose out to mode that are effective

acodring to even it booster is takes weeks to train a cw ops and it
take practice for most to keep up their skill

voivce why these day even the porblem for voice op in geting through signal problem is practiced by cell phones users in many locals on a daily basis

CW was too expensive in human and finacail terms to surviv in the
comercail world

it is too expensive in huan terms to hold sway with more than half of the ARS ops now (look at the numers) andyet it boosters inist like the King of englad did at one point in trying to ban the playing of golf to

insist on it continued infliction on the ARS

yet it is likely as the longbow does survive being superceeded by the crossbow musket and M16 that it will survive

but could drop the crap about it being the end of the ars to change in the tech of the late 20th century and stop decring those that would like to play as trators to the kingdom of the ARS

RE,

The Mexicans just may refer to themselves as : Norte Amercanos
-or- Americanos del Norte
http://pt.wikipedia.org/wiki/Estados_Unidos_da_Am%C3%A9rica

The Cubans might call themselves : Americanos de Cuba.

Seriously NO Canadian would call themselves an : American [.]
- - - Even the French Canadians would say : Je Suis Un Canadien !

Sur Americanos -or- Americanos del Sur -or- Americanos Latinos

The Brazilians being slightly different would say : Americanos Sul

Only an American (USA) would Boldly Say :
I Am An American ! - and I Am Proud of It !
and so say i ~ RHF

GPS systems are receivers. Transmitters that use GPS-derived data aren't GPS-based systems, they're transmitter-based systems. No transmitter, no notification. No GPS, notification is a little less accurate, that's all.

Or, in this case, ships that were part of the same flotilla (they didn't have to have any luck in being in the area) only managed to rescue about 1% of the survivors. If they had waited for "passing ships", their grandchildren would have been too old for rescue. Most shipwreck survivors who are rescued aren't rescued by ships that just happen to be passing, they're rescued by ships that knew about the wreck and responded. (Before radio, most shipwreck survivors weren't rescued.)

Really? I only have four fingers and a thumb on each hand. That would seem to imply that only three fingers would be pointing back. Your mileage may vary.

Exactly. I have several pieces of ham equipment that I bought on eBay and I got what I paid for every time. The only real problems have been a couple of people who mistook a customs invoice for a declaration of replacement value for transport loss. In one case the difference was large enough to need correction.

But I have, looking around here, a keyer, paddle, microphone, HF rig, antenna tuner, audio DSP filter, artificial ground, Noise canceller, speech processor, flashlight and reading light--all acquired via eBay.
And that's just my desktop. Around the room, a portable air conditioner, another HF rig, digital TV receiver, HDTV VCR, DVD player, stereo, HDTV set, and VHF-UHF handheld. In my bedroom there is an old S38B Hallicrafters. All from eBay.

The trick, you see, is to evaluate the listing (and the lister's feedback) to ensure that the item is what you want. Then don't bid anything more than you're actually willing to pay for the item. Take shipping into account. This means you will lose a lot of auctions. But you should not care, since you will lose them to people willing to pay more than YOU think the item is worth.

Now, a fair amount of that stuff was new when I bought it and came from dealers who happen to operate eBay stores. But a lot of it was second-hand as well.

I only ever had one problem that involved real money. And It was my fault, not theirs (I got suckered into dealing outside eBay channels).

Just a week ago I had a minor problem where something stuttered and I bought the same thing twice (from a dealer). eBay told us how to handle that smoothly and promptly so that I didn't have to buy twice and the seller wasn't charged for the sale.

The thing with eBay is to document every sale ON eBay. Do everything through eBay, except possibly private emails to a seller or buyer (but keep copies). If a dispute arises, it is usually because either the seller has misrepresented an item or the buyer doesn't want to pay for it. And eBay is well aware that, without buyers, they'd be a shell, not a business.

All that is true. If one was away from the shipping lanes, one was SOL or USCWAP. However, if one was in the shipping lanes with a flare, one at least had a chance of being rescued. According to my nephew, one of our ancestors was rescued in such a manner. Presumably, if that had not happened, neither he nor I would exist.

Considering you reside around Pennsauken, New Jersey, I would be far more concerned with the fact that your state is the only state to be raising taxes. With the resultant effect of an exodus of the rich. This leaves you to pay the bills of a Socialist Welfare state. Unfortunately, and unlike your "Assad the Afrikan" brothers, there is no oil in N.J. to support your Socialism.

The notification systems are radio-based. Notification isn't made by GPS. We had radio-based notification systems long before we had the GPS.

Once flares had been invented. We've been sailing the seas for at least 4,000 years, over 3,500 of them without radios, flares or other means of communications to ships or land installations we couldn't already see.

Oh, he will. Mark is caught between two septic systems and wallows in both.
Does he want to spam Usenet with his inane comments or does he want to spam Nim Busters? Since nobody (with any credibility) on these boards has responded to Mark, he slowly learned that he was being ignored or avoided.
So, what is a spammer to do? He did what came naturally to him, and that meant that since the low-lifes had gone elsewhere, he followed.
Now he wants to bring his like-minded idiots back to Usenet and again disrupt it for the rest of us.
The greatest service any of us can render Mark is to ignore him. That, more than anything, seems to bug him the most.
Killfile the putz. Ignore him. Simple as that.

I got nothing against CW, but being kept out of amateur radio for 40+ years cus I had difficulty learning the code, sucks.
Finally, I got enough right to barely pass the 5 wpm test. Still can't find anybody slow enough for me to copy on the air.
If I ever get good enough to use it, I'll try a few homebrew transmitter projects.

I expect there are some technically competent people who might be interested in amateur radio, but have no interest in learning code.

My Paul Schreck troll served its purpose.

For the last ten days I've watched as my New Sheriff In Town troll pitted you guys one against the other. To watch the verbal exchanges was reward enough, but to watch you guys argue amongst yourselves was the best yet.

You guys went nuts looking at headers while stumbling over yourselves to get "one up" on the other in the quest to figure out from whence my post originated.

The best part of this was when Paul himself commented that he would be posting complaints to my ISP for my sheer audacity. For what? I did not use Paul's name, remember? I used a name similar to, but not exactly as Paul spells his name.

Seems that stuffed-shirt Paul and his like-minded egocentric cohorts dislike being chastised, or worse, being made fun of.

By the way, Paul, I'm still waiting to see those complaints you offhandedly said you would lodge. Empty threats?

Sorry John, do some reading for once as that is the reality of the Canadian system. You'll actually learn something if you do research yourself and not just listen to NPR and CNN.

Now, on the other hand, if you live in the U.K., you'll still have healthcare through the end of the year, but if you are too old, they just let you die as it is not worth the expenditure to keep someone old alive even longer. But again, hey, your estate gets to keep the money!

Come on, this isn't really John now is it? Hillary Clinton, is that you?

John,

Just get on digital modes. Don't worry about CW. Digital is where the fun is and the copy is much better.

A buddy of mine in St. Louis and I experimented with low power and various digital modes last night on 40 meters. CW was marginal. The best was DominoEX with FEC - just about 100% all the time and it also has a second channel to display additional information.

CW can be fun at times, but maybe it's not your thing. Let the stone-age hams continue with CW, and move up and on to the digital modes.

MultiPSK, while a bit cluttered and ugly, is a great program you can use. MixW is cleaner looking and very good, but not as many capabilities in the program.

Move on and start having fun.

If you want easy...and most of the CW whiners do...why don't you just hook your laptop up to your DSL line and stay the hell off the air?

Jeez, you've got a pathetic joke for an exam now with canned questions to memorize and no code to learn. Too bad you're not still in your mother's womb so you don't have to feed yourselves. Though you have deluded yourselves into believing you are "hams," you are hardly believable when you wear that title. The only reason you have been able to slip through into the dumbed-down requirements and some sort of fcc "license" sham is because your appliance manufacturers that make your rigs and the charlatans like the arrl are selling out the hobby so they can sell you things.

It's ALL ABOUT THE MONEY and you no-coder idiots have fallen for it.

As for traditional, genuine "hams, we may be from the "Stone Age," but once the dinosauers became extinct the pristine landscape took on pollution and overcrowding. You simpletons have all drank the Kool-Aid and cannot see that you are parties to the eventual elimination of ham radio.

Thank God for "stone age hams," for at least there is someone still around that knows something about the avocation.

Well as a supporter of getting rid of the out-dated CW testing requirement, I passed my test 35 years ago and a 13WPM CW exam. So I am one of what you called a "genuine ham" but still have the intelligence to know that a CW exam is old, stupid and mostly supported by a bunch of stone-age hams who whine because they had to pass a more stringent test and can't accept that others are not having to study for and pass a more stringent test. Waaaaa, Waaaaa, Waaaaa.....I want my CW. Blah, Blah, Blah.

That is somewhat true. So what. Heck, what does a test even prove anymore? I can have 440 handheld family band transceivers with the same power as many small ham handhelds. I don't need a license to use those, so what's the big deal about stringent testing requirements for hams.
Test hams only on the legal issues and rules. We don't really even need the other crap anymore. It's not like we dealing with lethal voltages all the time like the days of ol'.

So what if it is about the money. You need money to live on right?
What's the matter with spending money to create jobs from manufacturing, selling, fixing, etc. ham radios. Maybe it's also about having experienced radio communicators in an emergency and a lot of extra equipment in home inventories.

> As for traditional, genuine "hams,

What is a genuine ham? Someone who knows CW? That's a laugh. Look at all the bickering "genuine hams" who passed that all important test and 13 or 20WPM CW and who argue and fight on the bands. Did you listen to 75 Meters? And I mean going back 30+ years ago? Your testing did not stop the idiot "genuine hams" back then now did it?

Yep, you should. Try:

"People who live in glass houses should dress in the basement"

It's ironic justice that someone who posts a typo flame posts more typos in his flame than the post he's flaming.

You just don't get it do you. There are conditions for each mode that will make that mode "the best". Every mode has its place. That goes for voice, all the multiplicity of digital modes and yes CW. Last night you had the best luck with DominoEx. Another night RTTY might be better. Another night, voice might be more intelligible. Yet another night will favor CW.

Based on what I've read about DominoEX, it is a form of Multi-Frequency Shift Keying. This variation looks to be more robust than others, however, anything that can compromise FSK and MFSK has the potential to compromise DominoEX. It will merely be a matter of the degree of severity needed before it becomes unusable.

Just because something is old doesn't make it useless or stone age. Pencils have been around far longer and are still highly useful.

Actually it was a simple realization on my part that half the alphabet was the mirror of the other. i.e. a/n f/l e/t etc. When I had this epiphany I basically knew the code. All I had to do was learn to receive it which I did successfully twice, once for my novice and once again when I sat for my Tech before my novice license came. Passed both tests.
Haven't used it much since. My choice.

no you don't get it

CW is in radio terms stone age, simol e fact stone does not mean useless you lack of ability to use english is worse than my problem with it you can't use words even though you can spell em

A stone club is still leathal does that mean the army should drill and train with stone weapons?
CW is obselete like HMS Canpous at the battle of the Falklands, like the Bowmen that fought with em in the retreat to Dunkirk .

utility does not preclude obselenece

LEARN ENGLISH esp when yo u lhave played spelling NAZI your self

Thanks Dee, you admitted that CW is not the best mode in any condition.
You agree that different modes work better under differing conditions.
I agree. That's why is it utterly stupid to test incoming hams on one mode of communication. Finally we agree on something.

Any mode can become unusable depending on conditions. The best thing is that some digital modes can be decoded when you cannot even hear the signal with a human ear. You just cannot do that with CW. With CW if you cannot hear it, you cannot decode it.

I agree. I never said do away with CW. I like to use it myself.
However, tube rigs suck more electricity than solid state rigs and are bad for the environment so old things can be rather useless or damaging.
Just like CW, it's not useless, but continuing to have a CW testing requirement is damaging and outdated.

Riding horses is fun still, but very few want them for the normal day to day transportation now. They may be useful still, but for everyday transportation they are no longer required. Horses are found more and more out in the pasture where the CW testing requirement belongs.

Just found this thread. If I had to use CW to save someone's life, it would depend on a lot of variables.

Firstly, if it involved any of my own ham radio gear, it would be more than a little odd, since I have a mic for each transceiver and I don't own a key jack that would plug into any of them, although I do have a straight key, just no jack to plug it in with.

Assuming some weird contrived scenario where I had the equipment to send CW but not phone, it would depend what frequencies it worked on. If it was on the HF ham bands then no major problem, as there are still quite a few people who still use CW.

My own lack of real aptitude shouldn't be a real problem for two reasons. One, I could slow down to a comfortable speed, i.e. 5-10 wpm. Two, it would matter more whether others could copy my sending than vicea versa. I did pass 20 wpm, but have yet to buy a plug for my key, many years later. As I said though, that really wouldn't make a difference.

If you asked the same question to someone who had only passed 5 wpm and then, like me, never used it, then I suspect the victim wouldn't make it. But then in most countries there is NO morse code testing any more, so there are plenty of hams now who've never learnt atall. For decades there have been no code VHF hams in most countries anyway.

There again, if the key was anything other than a straight key, that would be curtains for the victim, as I would have no idea how to use it.

OTOH, if this scenario didn't involve the HF ham bands, then the victim would be as good as dead, as I'd never find a non-ham who could still read CW on the other end.

And your point was...?

Any notification that reports GPS coordinates is GPS-based,
by definition. When you add GPS capability to a radio transmitter, it doesn't cease to be radio-based but it also becomes GPS-based. It's not an either/or mutual exclusive situation. Just as one can have a vehicle that is both white and a Chevrolet, one can have an emergency system that is both GPS-based and radio-based.

No that has nothing to do with whether it should be tested. We do NOT agree on that issue.

CW is a valid and useful mode but it is different in nature from the other modes. All the other digital modes simply require investing perhaps as much as 30 minutes in setting up the hardware and software to get up and running even if you make your own interface. So one can quickly evaluate whether or not they will like it. On the other hand, it is impossible to determine whether you will like CW until you have learned it, which takes some time.
Many people who might like it won't tackle it unless it's required as they will have a false impression that it is too hard since there are so many trying to get the code requirement dropped by trying to convince people it is difficult. It is not difficult to learn but it does take time. I've known a number of people who admitted that they wouldn't have tried it unless required to do so but now find that they enjoy it. It's rather like piano lessons. Every adult I know who took piano as a child has made one of the two following statements: a) I'm glad my parents didn't let me quit, or, b) I wish my parents had not let me quit. The very adults who, as a child, were glad to drop piano are the ones who most deeply regret it now.

That is true but it is not a reason to condemn CW. It is merely a working parameter that one must deal with. Besides one can run CW at a higher output without risking damage to the radio to often make up the difference. Keep in mind that if you include the power requirements for the computer and monitor plus radio that a 25watt output signal for the digital mode draws more power than a radio putting out 100watts of CW.

I have repeatedly maintained that each mode has its advantages and disadvantages but the anti-CW crowd takes its particular characteristics as a reason to castigate it. They refuse to objectively evaluate their "high-tech" digital modes for their unique advantages and disadvantages. There are times when a voice signal will beat the digital modes in intelligibility. For example, PSK goes belly up with even the slightest auroral disturbance yet voices, while distorted, can still come through. It will take a higher level of auroral activity to knock out voice in comparison to that required to knock out PSK.

A well rounded ham should be able to select his/her mode on the basis of conditions and not be limited to by the fact that they were allowed to "slide" on the code training.

Who says you have to stick to tube rigs to run CW? I know you know better than that. Tube rigs have largely gone away (except for collectors) simply because its much easier to deal with solid state equipment. Yet if one wants to run a legal limit amp, it's going to be a tube unit as they haven't come up with a way to do it cost effectively any other way.

I strongly disagree that a CW testing requirement is damaging or outdated. There simply is not sufficient data to support that point of few. An occasional anecdote does not qualify as valid data.

Again I disagree. That analogy is not really valid. A better one would be comparing it to driving an automobile with a stick shift. I personally feel that every one who drives should be required to know how to drive a stick. They often get better mileage than automatics as an experienced driver can do a better job of selecting the shift point than a mere gadget. More people might select stick shifts if only they knew how to drive one.

To "some" extent, I "may" have to disagree. I held a class once for "No Code Tech" and one of the guys - a man in his 70s asked if he could go for the code test even though I wasn't teaching code. He said he had learned it years ago in the service - but may be rusty. Let me tell you - when he was done testing, he had PERFECT copy. Was he practicing all along? We'll never know - nor did I ask. He has since passed on. Some people DO have a good memory and retain quite well. Others - lose things almost immediately if not used. Some of us, it takes a while to lose it and we usually do.

Dee, you can disagree all you want. The fact is that the world is moving on and away from CW testing. Not the mode, but the testing requirement. It is just outdated and not necessary. If you want to learn it and then use it, great. The time has come to stop forcing an old mode onto people. We can debate the merits of CW all day. In 200 years, no one will be using it. It will die a natural death like all languages because the world evolves. Better things come along. And like many humans, you are resisting change because people hate change. But change is inevitable. You cannot stop this change and it is a change for the better even if you won't admit it. History will show the only way to save the Amateur Radio Service and help its growth is to evolve and change. Out with the old and in with the new. Those that won't evolve will fade from the earth just like stone-age man. Good bye CW testing requirement. Your departure is long, long overdue.

It's like riding a bicycle when you could be driving an SUV.
If you like to do it, then do it, but don't force others to adopt your particular favorite aspect of our hobby. There's room for many favorite aspects.

For communications capability under difficult conditions, CW cannot hold a candle to PACTOR II. For fun, PACTOR II cannot hold a candle to CW. That's my personal experience and opinion.

Very well put. Every mode is useful, important and valuable in different situations. What's unfortunate, is that the only modes the anti-CW crowd wants and supports are "Lazy Mode" and "Retard mode"

Actually, I was not trying in the least. I did not consider it worth applying much effort to correct someone so ignorant. I will point out that no definite article is necessary in the first sentence, eg,"you or the." But thank you for pointing out my typographical error any way.

So, let's re-cap Mark's wonderful life, shall we:

1) He was drafted into the US Army.
2) He is a member of the Chemical Corps.
3) The military won't let him retire.
4) He doesn't serve under the name 'Mark Morgan', but that's okay, 'cuz the FBI, DOD, and CIA have all told him he can do it.
5) He is on-the-lam from stalking former marines and fatal attraction ex-wives
6) He was, until recently, paying $5/hr. to access his ISP
7) He has a 248 IQ, but can't figure out how to use a spell checker.
8) He is a bi-sexual 33 yr. old Pagan male ham who likes to be spanked.

9) He can't find any action on the military base in Central IL, so he has to ask people on USENET.

Have I missed anything?

Pray tell, oh wise one, from what source are you getting this information? You claim that this is a typical scenario in Canada, which is utter BS (= Bush shit), which means that it happens all the time. It seems rather strange that none of this seems to make the headlines or news.

BTW, I overheard this while I was visiting in Toronto and witnessed an accident: " Wow! The police and ambulance are much quicker here than in Atlanta".

Maybe they just don't want you to know the truth? Not surprising, since the government in CanaDuh woud fall if you ever discovered the truth.

Did the accident involve the police and the ambulance racing to the donut shop?
Maybe that's why they appeared to be quicker.

Sorry Blow Code, but you cannot turn back the hands of time. The 13 & 20 WPM tests are gone forever. And soon, the CW testing requirement will be eliminated completely. It's the will of the majority. It's evolution. You can whine, cry and carry on all you want about the CW testing requirement. It is going the way of the buggy whip, the Ford Model-T, dinosaurs, the carrier pigeons, and a host of other old, outdated, and unnecessary things of the past. Good Bye and Good Riddance.

not the majority prehaps it is the will of and judgement of those that are supposed to serve the bets interest of the people the best interest of the people are served but ending code testing and the code culture that has dominated it and sent it on a downword slide not certain we can fix it with NOCode but it will be easier to try

It is possible that someone could learn at 5wpm, not use it for years, and still be able to use it, but I wouldn't want to bet my life on it.

More to the point is I can't magine a scenario in which CW would be the only mode available, and that hams are about the only remaining users of CW.

As it happens, I do think people should have to learn on a stick shift, but I don't support code testing. If you can't drive a stick shift, you can't drive my car, as every car I've had has had a stick shift and so will every car I buy in future. OTOH, every rig I've bought has come with a mic, and none of them came with a key. Now, I know you can get some QRP rigs that are CW only.

The point is, there is a very real chance that it may be necessary to drive someone else's car in an emergency, or even just to help out. What happens when you need to get someone to the emergency room and the only car available is a stick shift? It's no good saying that statistically manual shifts are declining in sales, as there are plenty of us who will never buy an automatic.

OK, maybe you can say that you don't own a mic, and all the rigs in your shack are hooked up to a key (good luck on the local repeater!). What then is the realistic scenario where I will have to use one of your radios to save the world? (or even to save the next door neighbour) Doesn't seem to likely, does it?

I think this is the nature of the premise on which the original post was based.

Compare it to a similar situation, where a film camera user is debating a digital camera user:

"If you came upon a drowning man, and you had to choose whether to save him or photograph his demise, what kind of film would you use?"

why do many hams cheat in contests?

a classic is the guy who operates from him home qth,
then claims he operated on "battery power" the whole
time.

for those with substandard reading comprehension, this does not imply all hams who operate from their home on battery power are contest cheats.

A transmitter with no mic, no computer - just a transmit switch. Or not even a transmit switch, but you can get to one of the battery wires. Far fetched, but it could happen.

>and that hams are about the only remaining users of CW.

Boy Scouts? The military no longer uses CW - what used to be passed by brass pounders is now passed digitally. Merchant Marine? Same thing. Aero commo? Same thing, except for voice. I doubt any group or service actually uses it these days.

Even those who tout digital modes - they want to buy an interface and software and "be" on digital. Then they wonder why the signal they're hearing, that sounds just like the digital mode they use, doesn't work on their setup. Maybe because a PSK program won't decode SSTV?

Reminds me of the GPRS "exerts" who can't understand why changing the "code" on their radios doesn't eliminate the interference from the guy next door.

The anti-CW crowd wants no code and a written test you can memorize the answers to. It's their "right" to be on the air, isn't it? Even if they need 2 more clues to be totally clueless?

learn what you are tlaking about psk31 sounds very little like sstv and most of the programs that can demolate it show you a spectrograhand they look nothing alike

there is some time confusion in wether that sgnal BPSK 31 or QPSK31 but the marvels of Windows wallo me to run the output of the sound card interface to at least 2 program so it can be worked out

you just want to bash any ham that doesnot follow your morse fetish

it is our right and everybody else right that any restriction to our access to public spectrum be "neccisary and proper" (one of 3 clauses in the constitution that give the power to regulate the airwave to the govet at all) otherwise the 10 reserving all right and power to the sates or the people applies modifing that is the thrid place where the consititution of US touches on this issue mby making the constitution and the TREATIES made the supreme law of the land

according the Govt lost the POWER to impose Morse Code test on the ARS unless it can be justified under some other powere of the Constitution

I find it interesting that the ProCode tes crowd has such disrespect for that document

So, let's re-cap Mark's wonderful life, shall we:

1) He was drafted into the US Army.
2) He is a member of the Chemical Corps.
3) The military won't let him retire.
4) He doesn't serve under the name 'Mark Morgan', but that's okay, 'cuz
the FBI, DOD, and CIA have all told him he can do it.
5) He is on-the-lam from stalking former marines and fatal attraction ex-wives
6) He was, until recently, paying $5/hr. to access his ISP
7) He has a 248 IQ, but can't figure out how to use a spell checker.
8) He is a bi-sexual 33 yr. old Pagan male ham who likes to be spanked.

9) He can't find any action on the military base in Central IL, so he has to ask people on USENET.
10) His best like-minded buddy lives in Glendale, West Virginia and neither of them can spell.

Have I missed anything?

I could do that. All my home equipment is directly connected to a deep discharge marine battery that keeps delivering power when the AC fails. It is charged by a solar panel.

Because they have very small dics and will do anything just to get their name in print in the contest results in either QST or CQ. It's no different than the 52 year old almost-geezer driving around in

Or the clubs who operate Field Day running an extension cord into the nearby buildings to power the SB-220 or Alpha Amplifier. (I've seen a club which placed 2nd and 1st in their section for the past 6 years who have done this little trick every damm year. This year the bastard who did it tried to hide the cord with grass clippings because some had camera phones and he didn't want to have his club check-logged)

No, but a damm lot of contesters break the rules every year just so they can get that dumb certificate on their wall. If they don't it's like they were denied their Viagra at the Pharmacy or something similar....

WWW.HAMJAMMERS.COM

Free Audio Downloads From The Dark Netherworld of Ham Radio:

The Most Infamous Lids To Ever Disgrace The Amateur Service!

This website is devoted to demonstrating what an absolutely worthless, stupid hobby ham radio is.If anybody tells you that ham radio is fun, or interesting, or that you will meet nice, interesting people by becoming a ham, DON'T BELIEVE THEM!

Hams are the biggest group of whiners, snivelers, complainers and all-around no-talent losers you will ever meet.This is because the system itself is a veritable recipe for selecting dweebs and idiots with pocket protectors: Take a fat dweeb who has no friends or social skills and can't get a date; give him a trivial exam where the questions and answers are all available beforehand; and then give him a license and tell him he's somehow "special". Voila!
You have an insufferable, boring ham radio operator who thinks he's morally and intellectually superior to other people.

It's inevitable. Don't make the mistake of getting involved in this hobby!

WARNING: Some of the audio files are rated "R"! Your Webmaster cannot be responsible and you lose your job because you don't show up for work.

The 30 Steps below will help all New Hams, it will also help you to find others just like yourself. These 30 steps should also be added to the present writtens.

Step One: Use as many "Q" signals as possible. Yes, I know they were invented solely for CW and are totally inappropriate for two meter FM, but they are fun and entertaining. They keep people guessing as to what you really meant. I.E. "I'm going to QSY to the phone." Can you really change frequencies to the phone? QSL used to mean, "I am acknowledging receipt", but now it appears to mean, "yes" or "OK". I guess I missed it when the ARRL changed the meaning. It is also best to use "OK" and "QSL" together. Redundancy is the better part of Lid-dom.

Step Two: Never laugh when you can say "HI HI". No one will ever know you aren't a long time CW rag-chewer if you don't tell them. They'll think you've been on since the days of Marconi.

Step Three: Utilize an alternative vocabulary. Use words like "destinated" and "negatory". It's OK to make up your own words here. I.E. "Yeah Tom, I "pheelbart zaphonix" occasionally myself."

Step Four: Always say "XX4XXX" (Insert your own call) "for I.D." As mentioned in Step One, anything that creates redundancy is always encouraged. That's why we have the Department of Redundancy Department. (Please note that you can follow your call with "for identification purposes" instead of "for I.D." While taking longer to say, it is worth more "LID points".

Step Five: The better the copy on two meter FM, the more you should use phonetics. Names should be especially used if they are short or common ones. I.E. "My name is Al... Alpha Lima" or "Jack.. Juliet Alpha Charlie Kilo." If at all possible use the less common HF phonetics "A4SM... America, Number Four, Sugar Mexico." And for maximum "LID points", make up unintelligible phonetics. "My name is Bob... Billibong Oregano Bumperpool."

Step Six: Always give the calls of yourself and everyone who is (or has been) in the group, whether they are still there or not. While this has been unnecessary for years, it is still a great memory test. You may also use "and the group" if you are an "old timer" or just have a bad memory. Extra points for saying everyone's call and then clearing in a silly way "K2PKK, Chow, Chow."

Step Seven: Whenever possible, use the wrong terminology. It keeps people guessing. Use "modulation" when you mean "deviation", and vice-versa.

Step Eight: If someone asks for a break, always finish your turn, taking as long as possible before turning it over. Whenever possible, pass it around a few times first. This will discourage the breaker, and if it is an emergency, encourage him to switch to another repeater and not bother you.

Step Nine: Always ask involved questions of the person who is trying to sign out. Never let him get by with just a "yes" or "no" answer. Make it a question that will take him a long time to answer.

Step Ten: The less you know on a subject, the more you should speculate about it in the roundtable. Also the amount of time you spend on the subject should be inversely proportionate to your knowledge of the subject even though you have no damn clue.

Step Eleven: Always make sure you try to communicate with only a handheld and a rubber duck antenna. Also, make sure you work through a repeater that you can hear very well, but it cannot hear you. This will put out a kind of "LID mating call": "Well, Joe, I can hear the repeater just fine here. I wonder why it can't hear me?" You will score maximum LID points if you are mobile, and with the radio lying in the passenger seat.

Step Twelve: If you hear two amateurs start a conversation, wait until they are twenty seconds into their contact, and then break in to make a call, or better yet to use the auto-patch. Make sure you keep the repeater tied up for at least three minutes. This way, once the two have re-established contact, they won't even remember what they were talking about.

Step Thirteen: You hear someone on the repeater giving directions to a visiting amateur. Even if the directions are good, make sure you break in with your own "alternate route but better way to get there" version. This is most effective with several other "would-be LIDs", each giving a different route. By the time the visiting amateur unscrambles all the street names whizzing by in his mind, he should have moved out of the range of the repeater. This keeps you from having to stick around to help the guy get back out of town, later.

Step Fourteen: If an annoying station is bothering you, make sure your other "LID" buddies have a "coded" frequency list. Even though "CODES" are strictly forbidden on Amateur Radio, it's really neat to practice "James Bond" tactics.

Step Fifteen: Always use the National Calling Frequency for general conversations. The more uninteresting, the longer you should use it. Extra points are awarded if you have recently move from an adjacent frequency for no reason. Make sure when DX is "rolling" in on 52.525 that you hang out there and talk to your friends five miles down the road about the good old CB days!

Step Sixteen: Make sure that if you have a personal problem with someone, you should voice your opinion in a public forum, especially a net. Make sure you give their name, call, and any other identifying remarks. For maximum points, make sure the person in question is not on the repeater,

Step Seventeen: Make sure you say the first few words of each transmission twice, especially if it is the same thing each time. Like "roger, roger" or "fine business, fine business". I cannot stress enough about encouraging redundancy.

Step Eighteen: If you hear a conversation on a local repeater, break in and ask how each station is receiving you. Of course they will only see the signal of the repeater you are using, but it's that magic moment when you can find a fellow "LID", and get the report. Extra points are awarded if you are using a base station, and the repeater is less than twenty-five air miles from you.

Step Nineteen: Use the repeater for an hour or two at a time, preventing others from using it. Better yet, do it on a daily basis. Your quest is to make people so sick of hearing your voice every time they turn on their radio, they'll move to another frequency. This way you'll lighten the load on the repeater, leaving even more time for you to talk on it.

Step Twenty: See just how much flutter you can generate by operating at handheld power levels too far away from the repeater. Engage people in conversations when you know they wont be able to copy half of what your saying. Even when they say your uncopyable, continue to string them along by making further transmissions. See just how frustrated you can make the other amateur before he finally signs off in disgust.

Step Twenty One: Use lots of radio jargon. After all, it makes you feel important using words ordinary people don't say. Who cares if it makes you sound like you just fell off Channel 19 on the citizen's Band? Use phrases such as "Roger on that", "10-4", "I'm on the side", "Your making the trip" and "Negatory on that".

Step Twenty Two: Use excessive microphone gain. See just how loud you can make your audio. Make sure the audio gain is so high that other amateurs can hear any bugs crawling on your floor. If mobile, make sure the wind noise is loud enough that others have to strain to pick your words out from all the racket.

Step Twenty Three: Start every transmission with the word "Roger" or "QSL". Sure, you don't need to acknowledge that you received the other transmission in full. After all, you would simply ask for a repeat if you missed something. But consider it your gift to the other amateur to give him solace every few seconds that his transmissions are being received.

Step Twenty Four: When looking for a contact on a repeater, always say your "listening" or "monitoring" multiple times. I've always found that at least a half dozen times or so is good. Repeating your multiple "listening" ID's every 10 to 15 seconds is even better. Those people who didn't want to talk to you will eventually call you, hoping you'll go away after you have finally made a contact.

Step Twenty Five: Always use a repeater, even if you can work the other station easily on simplex ... especially if you can make the contact on simplex. The coverage of the repeater you use should be inversely proportional to your distance from the other station.

Step Twenty Six: When on repeaters using courtesy tones, you should always say "over". Courtesy tones are designed to let everyone know when you have unkeyed but don't let that stop you. Say "over", "back to you" or "go ahead". It serves no useful purpose but don't worry, it's still fun!

Step Twenty Seven: Use the repeater's autopatch for frivolous routine calls... especially during morning or evening commute times. While pulling into the neighborhood, call home to let them know you'll be there in two minutes.... or, call your spouse to complain about the bad day you had at work. After all, the club has "measured rate" service on their phone line so they get charged for each autopatch call. Your endeavor is to make so many patches in a year that you cost the club at least $20 in phone bills. That way you'll feel you got your money's worth for your dues!

Step Twenty Eight: Never say "My name is ....." It makes you sound human. If at all possible, use one of the following phrases: a) "The personal here is ..." b) "The handle here is..."

Step Twenty Nine: Use "73" and "88" incorrectly. Both are already considered plural, but add a "s" to the end anyway. Say "73's" or "88's". Who cares if it means "best regards" and "love and kisses." Better yet, say "seventy thirds"! (By the way, seventy thirds equals about 23.3).

Step Thirty: If the repeater is off the air for service, complain about the fact that it was off the air as soon as it's turned back on. Act as though your entire day has been ruined because the repeater wasn't available when you wanted to use it. Even thought you have never paid a penny to help out with the upkeep of it.

You may want to get some help with this anger problem you, and many of us in this group seem to have and hold on to, until the given moment when there's an opportunity to vent. My experience has shown me that when I start expressing myself like that, there's usually a problem within myself. In my case, it was worth the investigation. But if that's not the case with you, great! It's probably every body else that's wrong.

You responded to a NG troll, but your theory needs to be addressed.

I would say that since helping (using) Israel is to our advantage, therefore the problem merely exists in your mind.

Only the Jews. Remember when we sold them some F-16s to level a nuke plant in Iran? Get real, we supplied the equipment, they did the dirty work.

At the moment we are not fighting for Israel. You obviously have no clue as to what this war is about either in the media or the true reason as to why we are sticking our nose in the mideast.

Before communism we had no enemies in USSR, China, Cuba, ECT... What's your point?

I have no doubt that Morkie get's his chops popped no matter where he chooses to spread his disjointed, fractured, idiotic rhetoric and foolishness.

It's not that hard to do! He makes it easy to make a fool out of him. No doubt his "wife" has a collection of Naziesque leather attire on a pacifier...Usually the alleged "wifes" pacifier, since the alleged wife isn't female.

Until it's given an acutal docket number, it doesn't "exist" as a suit.

That it's filed does.

> it your lawsuit existed I would have been at least 100 days ago

You keep trying to pull the wool over people's eyes, Morkie.

Congratulations, Morkie. You actually spelled all of the words in one sentence correctly. Now if we can get you to use proper capitalization and punctuation, you'll be well on your way to actually LOOKING like you have at least ONE of those college degrees that you allege.

Then once we get you to THAT point, we can work on getting the CONTENT of your sentences to be truthful. Then you'll look like two out of three.

Then once we get you to exercise some common sense and rational thinking, you'll get to three out of three.

Too bad that the average livespan for humans is only 75 years. It will, regretably, take several lifetimes to get to you even close to the first milestone.

Who's "Maj Robeson", Morkie?

No "Maj Robeson" posts here.

> as long as I post you and your sock puppets will contiue to harrass me

No...

As long as you ACT LIKE AN IDIOT people will continue to make fun of your idiotic behaviour.

And so far it's apparent that you have no intention of stopping idiotic behaviour, so what YOU perceive as "harrassment" will probably continue.

Nope.

You are.

Witness your attempts to libel ME by crossposting non-germane posts to an "alt" domain newsgroup.

The point there being that 99% of the posts showing up there are all yours...And it's quite apparent that the intent is to stalk and discredit me in an attempt to force me to yield to YOUR absuing an bullying.

That's partially why the few folks that have written to me directly think you're an idiot.

There's no "Maj Robeson" posting here, Morkie.
